Wofford selected for public humanities initiative grant

Wofford College is among 25 institutions that will participate in the inaugural cohort of Humanities Research for the Public Good, an initiative to promote student research, to address issues of public significance and to showcase the rich archival, library and museum collections held by participating institutions.

The Council of Independent Colleges (CIC) awarded the grant to support Wofford's student-centered project, "Acknowledging Our Past: Race, Landscape and History." The project allows for two student researchers to be trained in archival research, spending a semester researching the archives and special collections at Wofford's Sandor Teszler Library and the college's community partnering organization in the project, the Spartanburg County Public Libraries. Student researchers also will learn from and work directly with members of the Spartanburg community during their research. The project will culminate in a public exhibit designed and led by students to showcase their research in May 2020.

The project team includes: Dr. Rhiannon Leebrick, assistant professor in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology; Luke Meagher, special collections librarian in the Sandor Teszler Library; Brad Steinecke, assistant director of local history at the Spartanburg County Public Libraries; Dr. Phillip Stone, Wofford College archivist; and Jessalyn Story, director of Wofford's Center for Community-Based Learning.

Wofford was selected to participate in the CIC initiative through a highly competitive application process, with nearly four applications for each available spot in the program. Each institution will partner with a community-based organizations to engage members of the public on a topic of local importance.

The Makers Market sponsored by Duke Energy will be set up where over 35 regional artisans will sell their wares. This is only one of the many things to see & do at Spartanburg Soaring! 2019.

Yes, you can age gracefully

From the American Counseling Association

As we age, things change. Some of those changes are obvious in the mirror, while others become evident when a flight of stairs leaves us out of breath, or when we can't remember the name of that cousin in Omaha.

Accepting the physical and mental changes that occur as we get older can be stressful. The aging process can be frightening in some ways, especially if we aren't prepared for the gradual changes that we all face. But we can prepare for the inevitable changes aging brings, and take some actions to help minimize the effects of those changes.

Becoming older brings a variety of physical changes. Our bones become smaller and weaker, the heart pumps blood at a lower rate, our metabolism and digestive system slow down, we face more dental problems, and our skin begins to wrinkle and become less elastic.

So what's the good news? Simply that there are ways to fight back. No, you can't stop all the changes that getting older brings, but you definitely can accept those changes and take action to minimize the negative effects.

What this means is being proactive in terms of aging. Staying healthy at any age doesn't just happen. Diet, for example, is an important part of feeling good and staying healthy regardless of your age, but it is especially important as we get older. A diet rich in fruits, vegetables and whole grains is one way to assist your slowed-down digestive system and to increase overall energy.

You might also check with your family physician about whether vitamin and mineral supplements might be a good idea. And seeing that physician on a regular basis can help minimize the risk of suddenly facing a serious health problem.

We can also fight the aging process by staying physically and mentally active. Exercises like muscle training and resistance work can help reverse bone loss and fight the back problems that often come with aging. Your local YMCA or physical trainer can help set up a program appropriate for you.

Maintaining social contacts, learning something new like a musical instrument or foreign language or just playing word games or doing crossword puzzles can all help keep your brain active.

Getting older may not always be fun, but you can take actions to help minimize the stress it can bring and overcome the limitations aging might otherwise put on your life.

Upstate professor receives $527,551 grant to study long-term memory formation, retention

By Vince Moore, Director, News & Media Relations

Is it possible that day-dreaming is not such a waste of time after all? That while we're taking a break from our immediate surroundings, our brains are working to process recent memories without a conscious effort on our part?

Thanks to a $527,551 grant from the National Science Foundation (NSF), Furman University Assistant Professor of Psychology Erin Wamsley plans to find out.

"While 'zoning out' during our daily tasks is typically considered to be a waste of time, those moments of being lost in thought may be essential to the formation of memory," Wamsley said. "That's what we hope to discover with our research."

Wamsley said that even when we are sitting still

Erin Wamsley (center) said her NSF-funded project will provide research training for approximately 12 undergraduate students.

and doing nothing, the mind and brain are continuously switching between two distinct states—an "online" state where we are paying attention to our immediate surroundings, and an "offline" state where our attention turns inward to thoughts of things like the past and future.

"We are hypothesizing that the early stages of memory processing occur specifically during moments of this offline state, which are interspersed throughout the day," Wamsley said. "By developing new methods of measuring these waking states and their function, we can learn more about the formation and retention of long-term memories."

As a part of NSF's Research in Undergraduate Institutions program, Wamsley said the research project will provide research training for approximately 12 undergraduate students over the course of three years, including members of underrepresented minority groups and students from underserved public high schools in South Carolina.

Wamsley joined Furman's Department of Psychology and Program in Neuroscience at Furman in 2014. She has received several grants to fund her research at the Furman Sleep Laboratory, where she and her students study how the brain processes memories during sleep as well as the relationship of sleep-dependent memory processing to dream experiences.

She began her academic career at Guilford College in North Carolina, where Wamsley double-majored in psychology and philosophy. She went on to complete her doctoral studies at the City University of New York. After earning her Ph.D. in 2007, Wamsley had a postdoctoral fellowship in the Division of Sleep Medicine at Harvard Medical School, where she was later promoted to instructor of psychiatry.

How to prep financially when changing jobs

(StatePoint) The average American will hold 11.7 jobs between the ages of 18 and 48, according to The Bureau of Labor Statistics. If a job change is on your horizon, remember that a new salary and benefits package bring new financial considerations.

“Changing jobs brings with it a myriad of financial decisions. Take time to assess your financial situation and make any necessary adjustments so you can start the new job focused and ready,” says Valerie Radford, a vice president of Strategic Initiatives at Prudential Financial.

As you’re making the switch, Radford says there are a few things to keep in mind:

- Don’t Leave Money on the Table: Keep track of your 401(k) if you had one at your previous job. You can simplify your financial picture by bringing together any orphan plans you’ve left in the investing universe. Also, make sure to take advantage of your new employer’s 401(k) match feature, if offered, and continue momentum by increasing your contribution, if possible.

- Don’t Go It Alone: Consider using a third-party platform to manage finances and benefits in one place that’s designed to rebalance your goals as circumstances change. For example, when you set up an account with LINK by Prudential, you’ll be prompted to answer questions about what financial goals are important to you and, in turn, will be offered personalized solutions to help you reach them. LINK combines the convenience of a digital experience with the knowledge of a professional advisor who can walk you through this important transition by phone, video or in-person. To learn more, visit prudential.com/link

- Consider Your Bonus: If

you’re receiving a sign-on bonus or have an old bonus saved, determine whether this money belongs in a short-term, no-risk account or whether a longer-term approach with exposure to financial markets makes sense.

- Budgets are Fundamental: If you’re making more money, calculate if additional funds can be put into savings. This is a great place to use a tool like LINK that allows you to see all your money in one place, and can help you determine where to direct extra funds. If you’re making less money, you might need to see where to make cuts.

- Review Your Insurance: Take a breath before moving forward with health coverage decisions. If you’re married, evaluate both partner’s plans, not only for the more affordable option, but also for each plan’s restrictions. For instance, if one plan allows you to see doctors without referrals while the other doesn’t, you’ll have to decide whether that’s worth the extra cost. Finally, take a look at the amount your new employer is offering for life insurance. It’s often not enough. Consulting a financial advisor can help you determine how much additional insurance to take out.

Don’t let your financial goals get lost in the shuffle of a job transition. A few strategies and tools can keep you on track.

April is Distracted Driving Awareness Month

Charlotte, N.C. – To kick off Distracted Driving Awareness month AAA Carolinas joined law enforcement and supporters at a press conference at the NC Department of Insurance in Raleigh to urge lawmakers to pass the Hands Free NC bill. DOI Commissioner Mike Causey announced his support of HB 144, the proposed legislation that would make it illegal to use a hand held communications device, including a cell phone, while driving.

Families who lost loved ones from a distracted driving crash spoke on behalf of the bill. Rep. Kevin Corbin of Macon, who filed HB 144, was in attendance along with bill co-sponsor Rep. Garland Pierce of Scotland.

“We applaud Rep. Corbin’s efforts to make our roads safer and commend DOI Commissioner Causey for publicly supporting the Hands Free NC bill,” said Tiffany Wright, President of AAA Carolinas Foundation for Traffic Safety. “April is dedicated to raising awareness of the dangers of distracted driving and this is the perfect time for lawmakers to act and move this bill forward. This is a non-partisan issue and is ultimately about saving lives.”

The current texting while driving law is very difficult to enforce. The Hands Free NC bill gives law enforcement the ability to stop drivers for holding their phone, whereas in the past they would have to have a secondary reason like speeding or not wearing a seat belt. The bill carries a $100 fine for the first offense and a larger fine and insurance points for the second and third offense.

According to NCDOT, in 2018 there were 123 fatalities coded as a result of distracted driving. However, AAA Carolinas believes the numbers are higher because the behavior is difficult to prove and motorists won’t readily admit to doing it. Last year, there were also 102 rear end fatal crashes and 733 lane departure fatalities. Rear end and lane departure collisions are a common result from distracted driving.

AAA is committed to helping drivers curb the urge to engage in distracting behaviors behind the wheel. Any task that requires taking your eyes or attention off-the-road and hands off-the-wheel can present a dangerous risk on the roadway. In order to avoid distraction, AAA recommends:

- * Disconnect and Drive Put aside electronic distractions and never use text messaging, email, video games or internet functions, including those built into the vehicle, while driving.

- * Know where you’re going: Pre-program your GPS and adjust seats, mirrors, climate controls and sound systems before putting the car in motion.

- * Secure Items: Properly secure children and pets and store loose possessions and other items that could roll around in the car.

- * Snack Smart: Avoid messy foods that can be difficult to manage.

Vet's charities are a good way to say 'thanks', but be cautious

By Richard Eckstrom, S.C. Comptroller

At first glance, they appear to be the noblest of causes. Their brochures feature images that tug at the heartstrings – perhaps a uniformed man in a wheelchair, or a tearful widow accepting a folded U.S. flag. They use patriotic-sounding names like "Honor America's Veterans" or "Salute our Soldiers."

But too often, so-called "charities" purporting to help veterans and their families fall far short of the charitable image they put forward. Independent watchdog groups in recent years have called out many veteran-oriented nonprofits, which are notorious for squandering hundreds of millions of dollars annually on administrative costs, salaries, benefits, and perks. In extreme cases, more than 90 percent of donations raised goes toward overhead – while vets themselves receive what's left over. To be sure, all types of charities can be vulnerable to "bad apples," which range from careless business models to outright scams. But veterans have always occupied a special place in our hearts, because we're grateful for the tremendous sacrifices they've made on our behalf. And, unfortunately, our deep well of gratitude and goodwill can make us unsuspecting targets for those seeking easy cash. A common denominator among the bad apples is their use of for-profit fundraisers like telemarketers and mailing firms, which can skim off as much as 80 percent of the funds they raise. "A small percentage of something is better than 100 percent of nothing," the president of one "charity" told the online veteran-issues publication VetLikeMe. Still, it's outrageous when someone intends to give $20 to a cherished cause and, in reality, a mere $4 or less of their donation goes to the cause. Some examples are downright disgusting. Like the Center for American Homeless Veterans, whose 2015 IRS filings showed it raised $2.5 million in donations while its expenses consumed all it raised – including paying its director $340,000 – according to the watchdog group Center for Public Integrity. And the American Veterans Foundation, which raised $6.5 million from 2014 to 2016 but spent 92 percent of it on professional fundraisers and salaries for its president and his son, according to a federal complaint filed last month. And Help the Vets, which, according to the Military Times, spent 95 percent of the $20 million it raised from 2014 to 2017 on fundraising, overhead, and its president's salary and benefits. With so many groups with similar sounding names, finding a trustworthy organization to support can be confusing. Fortunately, several charity watchdogs – including Charity Navigator (charitynavigator.org), Charity Watch (charitywatch.org), and the BBB Wise Giving Alliance (give.org) – want to help ensure your donation will be put to good use. These charity watchdogs evaluate national charities, rate them on the percentage of revenue applied toward the intended purpose, and sometimes publish lists of the best and worst. Charities with consistently outstanding ratings include: * The Gary Sinise Foundation (garysinisefoundation.org), the charity founded by the actor-director-musician which provides programs serving wounded veterans, current military members, and first-responders * The Fisher House Foundation (fisherhouse.org), which provides free housing to families of service members in military hospitals and VA medical centers * Soldiers' Angels (soldiersangels.org), whose programs include support for homeless and low-income veterans and care packages for current military members * And my favorite, Honor Flight (honorflight.org), which flies WWII, Korean War or Vietnam veterans to Washington DC to view national monuments erected in their honor. I've had the opportunity to volunteer with Honor Flight, and it's a wonderful tribute that stirs the hearts of veterans. Charity watchdogs also recommend doing your own research before donating to any group. Check the group's website for information about what it does, a list of its board of directors, and its latest financial reports. Look for charities that spend 75 percent or more on "program expenses" rather than on fundraising, administration, or salaries. And they advise skipping the telemarketers and giving directly to a charity to ensure a third party doesn't consume a huge chunk of your donation. If you're seeking information on a South Carolina group, the S.C. Secretary of State's website (scsos.com) might be helpful. Inputting the organization's name should tell you the percentage of its revenue that goes toward "program expenses." We admire our vets. Yet some need more than admiration. They need help. What better way to honor their service than to donate to a charity that serves their needs – and to donate wisely.

Charitable organization owes $10,000 in fines for delinquent registration statements, financial reports

Columbia - Secretary of State Mark Hammond announced recently that his office obtained an injunction against Miracle House of Hope Ministries for violations of the South Carolina Solicitation of Charitable Funds Act. The charitable organization has accrued fines totaling $10,000.00 for soliciting contributions while not registered and failure to file annual financial reports.

Miracle House of Hope Ministries is located in Charlotte, North Carolina, but the SC Secretary of State's Office has received complaints that the organization has solicited in Greenville, Dorchester, Lexington and Richland Counties. Miracle House of Hope Ministries representatives solicit cash on street corners and intersections from motorists who are likely unaware that the organization is operating illegally in the state. Secretary Hammond encourages all South Carolinians to notify the Secretary of State's Office if they have any concerns about a charitable organization. Citizens can file a complaint 24 hours a day, 7 days a week using the Secretary of State's Online Charitable Solicitation Complaint Form, which is available at www.sos.sc.gov or calling 1-888-242-7484.
