Converse College announces the Converse Promise Scholarship

Converse College recently announced the Converse Promise, a scholarship program for South Carolina high school seniors who graduate in the top 10 percent of their class.

Eligible students will receive up to the value of full tuition for up to eight semesters at Converse College. In order to qualify, students must graduate in the top 10 percent of their class, attend a high school in the state of South Carolina, and maintain eligibility to receive a full federal Pell grant. They also should have registered as a full-time student status, completed the FAFSA application by May 1 and have submitted a deposit to Converse College by May 1, for the fall semester immediately following high school graduation.

The Converse Promise expands upon the 2014 tuition reset by Converse College, which reduced tuition for its students by 43 percent, demonstrating Converse College's commitment to the affordability and accessibility of a private liberal arts education.

For more information on the Converse Promise, visit <https://www.converse.edu/converse-promise/>.

Dantherm Cooling opens its new global headquarters in Spartanburg

Dantherm Cooling, a Spartanburg-based engineering and manufacturing firm that produces high-quality climate control technology for electronic equipment cabinets and structures, celebrated the grand opening of its new global headquarters on December 19th.

The new 42,000 sq. ft. facility - located at 671 Springfield Rd., Spartanburg, SC 29303 - will house corporate sales offices, engineering design suites, and full manufacturing space. It will also feature a custom showroom and a state-of-the-art, UL-certified lab with upgraded testing capabilities.

The new headquarters represents a major expansion of the company, which expects to add up to a hundred new employees over the next few years. The new location sits on over seven acres of land, which gives the company additional room to further expand the facility as needed to meet future growth.

Dantherm Cooling, the former US business unit of Dantherm Holding A/S, a Danish manufacturer of HVAC&R equipment, became an independent company in 2018 when it was acquired by Madison, WI based Dane Manufacturing. Dane is an over 100-year-old manufacturing company with a rich history of making high quality products for many customers. Dantherm has been located in Spartanburg since 1996, and with the recent purchase and investment into R&D and operations, it rapidly outgrew its current space.

A Seat at the Table: Artists Collective to exhibit chair-themed artwork by four noted artists

Four guest artists will explore the complex nature of chairs in the exhibition A Seat at the Table: The Chair as Aesthetic and Social Construct at Artists Collective | Spartanburg in January and February 2020.

The exhibit of about 40 pieces of art will be housed in the facility's newly renamed and largest gallery—"The Solomon Gallery." It opened Jan. 7, and will close Saturday, Feb. 29. It will feature the work of Janet Kozachek, Janet Orselli, Lee Malerich, and Nathaniel Wallace. The public may view the 2-D and 3-D art at no charge Tuesday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. The exhibit's reception will be Thursday, Jan. 16, 5 - 9 p.m., during the city's monthly ArtWalk.

These artists are not members of Artists Collective | Spartanburg, but rather guest artists presenting a thematic exhibition. All of the work will be for sale and will range in price from about $300 to $4000.

Artists Collective | Spartanburg is the new name for the recently rebranded West Main Artists Co-op. However, it is still a membership-based nonprofit, and one of the leading arts agencies in Upstate South Carolina. It is housed in a three-story church building on West Main Street, near downtown Spartanburg. Currently, it has about 50 members (mostly visual artists but a few performing artists), and about 30 of them have studio space in the facility. Most months, the Collective has three new exhibits, featuring its members and guest artists. The facility has three galleries, a pottery studio, a printery, two performance stages, and the largest collection of for-sale and locally made art in the city and county. Wofford environmental studies majors have made the world their classroom over the past decade.

Decade of ruggedness

Celebrating environmental studies at Wofford

Numerous Wofford College students have made the world their environmental studies classroom.

Ireland McGaughey, a senior environmental studies and sociology and anthropology major from Savannah, Georgia, studied wildlife conservation and ethics in Tanzania.

Casey Harcourt, a senior environmental studies and mathematics major from Moreland, Georgia, explored public policy, science and Spanish in Quito, Ecuador, and the Galapagos.

Reeves Goettee, a senior biology and environmental studies major from Summerville, South Carolina, discovered even greater respect for sustainability while honing her photography skills in New Zealand.

The three women, who are members of the 10th anniversary class of environmental studies majors at Wofford, think global and act local. They embrace the breadth of the major while digging deep into their capstone projects. They're products of everything the program was designed to be, and they're going to make a difference wherever they go — no question.

McGaughey grew up on the Atlantic coast, fishing and catching insects. Harcourt's family owned a small farm outside of Atlanta.

Goettee's home was in the suburbs, but she spent time in the country with her grandparents.

"The students who major in environmental studies usually come from one of two pathways," says Dr. Kaye Savage, professor and chair of the department. "Some have grown up hunting and fishing and spending time in the woods with their families. They love that culture and love being outside. Then we have the students who come because they feel like the world is falling apart, and they need to make a difference."

Savage speaks from experience when she says those differences make for interesting class discussions. Add the interdisciplinary nature of the curriculum to the mix, and it's not uncommon for a topic such as climate change to start with science but jump to politics, the economy, demographics, denial and even religion or science fiction.

"In environmental studies, we emphasize the importance of the natural sciences, the social sciences and the humanities in understanding the world. They're the legs of the three-legged stool on which environmental studies students must metaphorically sit," says Dr. Peter Brewitt, assistant professor of environmental studies.

"The interdisciplinary nature of the major is what sets Wofford apart from other colleges and universities," says John Lane, a 1977 Wofford graduate, who team-taught the class and learning community that became the model for the major. Lane became the first director of the environmental studies program, which was designed to be broad with a rigorous field-work component.

Interdisciplinary courses — an introduction and a senior seminar — bookend required courses and electives that highlight environmental issues in the context of different disciplines.

"You can connect environmental studies to anything," Harcourt says. "That and the hands-on nature of the subject drew me into the major."

Savage explains that breadth is important because environmental problems cross boundaries. "If we're going to tackle those problems, we have to have an understanding of complex systems," she says.

Students gain depth through the major's capstone experience.

"The capstones are time consuming but rewarding. Working with students on projects of their own choosing and advising them as they ask questions and work through problems has turned out to be one of the more critical aspects of the program," says Dr. Terry Ferguson, a 1975 Wofford graduate, associate professor and senior researcher for the Goodall Environmental Studies Center.

Harcourt chose to do a capstone project on the practicality of green roofs. It builds on knowledge in sustainability, physics, botany, data analysis and even aesthetics.

Goettee combined photography and environmental studies for her capstone, which explores how humans interact with the landscape. She took most of the photos while she was in New Zealand. "I call the photos anti-selfies," Goettee says. "My project is a commentary on place and how people should be present in the landscape, instead of making it all about them."

McGaughey's capstone delves into the world of hydroponic farming. "This major speaks to my soul," she says.

A guiding faculty

Natural resource depletion, overpopulation, deforestation, genetic engineering, global warming ... Goettee still remembers the waves of environmental gloom and depressing statistics she and other students discussed for weeks in one of her first environmental studies courses.

"On one hand, I was compelled to act, but on the other, I felt like I was losing hope," she says.

"To lift our spirits, Dr. Savage had each of us bring in a positive article about the environment. It was really uplifting."

The exercise wasn't on the syllabus, but it's what her students needed, so she adapted. That's something Savage says she's gotten better at since coming to Wofford.

Savage's background was in environmental science, specifically geology and geochemistry. She's also an artist, and her art — handmade paper and mixed media sculptures that explore geologic and hydrologic data — was her way into a department shared by Lane, a poet, environmental writer and professor of English, and Ferguson, geoarchaeologist and photographer.

"This was new to me," says Savage, who team-taught several introductory classes with Lane in the beginning to get the hang of the "studies" part of the major.

In the fall of 2020, Savage will be the department's veteran and will become director of the Goodall Environmental Studies Center in Lane's stead. Lane and Ferguson both will retire at the end of the spring semester. Brewitt will take over as chair of the department.

Using love to help a sick child feel better

From the American Counseling Association

Ah, 'tis the season for many households to find themselves with one or more children suffering from a cold or the flu. Damp, chilly weather and all that contact with other sniffing children at school almost guarantees that winter illness will strike most homes.

Most of us are well aware of the medical steps to help our child get better, or at least feel better, but we sometimes forget there are emotional things we can do to help our child, too. That can be important because our kids often feel bad about feeling bad. Have your kids ever apologized for being ill, saying, "Mom, I'm sorry I'm sick"?

So, how to help? Start with a smile. If you're looking worried and concerned when approaching your ill child, he or she is going to begin worrying about why you look so worried.

Instead of asking, "How are you feeling?" when it's already clear that he or she is not feeling well, try to offer something positive. Tell your child that he or she is looking a little better, or has gotten some of that color back or seems a little cooler. Be assuring that you're doing your job to help the return to good health.

One of that best medicines for a sick child, regardless of age, is being generous with your hugs and cuddles. While it can be tempting to plop him or her in front of that TV and just checking in occasionally, offering physical contact that encourages positive feelings of safety brings better results.

Instead of TV time, trying snuggling with your child while reading a story or playing a game. If there is to be some TV time, spend at least part of it with him or her, holding hands while watching together.

There's no question that our minds have the power to affect our health. Talk with your child about imagining feeling better and you might find it can actually help him or her feel that way.

You also want to listen to your child. Encourage him or her to talk about what's being felt. If it's something as simple as a tummy ache, you may find the cause to be the stress of the day, not an illness.

None of us ever wants our child not feeling well, but a loving, supportive parent, encouraging a positive attitude, can often make a child feel better faster.

Lockheed Martin hosts Bahrain ambassador at F-16 production line in Greenville

Greenville - Production is now underway on the first F-16 Block 70 for the Royal Bahraini Air Force, and in December Lockheed Martin hosted Shaikh Abdullah bin Rashed Al Khalifa, ambassador of the Kingdom of Bahrain to the United States at the company's F-16 production line in Greenville.

"Lockheed Martin's partnership with Bahrain began more than 40 years ago and it continues today with the F-16," said Bridget Lauderdale, vice president and general manager of Lockheed Martin's Integrated Fighter Group. "Bahrain was the first country in the Gulf region to acquire the F-16 and the first customer in the world to procure the advanced F-16 Block 70."

"Bahrain has been a strategic partner and friend to the United States, and

Furman receives community impact award from USGBC Carolinas

By Tina Underwood, Contributor

Furman University has received a Sustainable Business Award from the U.S. Green Building Council Carolinas. The announcement was made Dec. 5 during the USGBC Carolinas: Green Gala & Sustainable Business Awards, which was held at the Mint Museum in Charlotte, North Carolina.

The award recognizes excellence in high-performance design, environmental stewardship and community impact, and highlights the green building initiatives and achievements of local projects, businesses and individual leaders.

"As an academic institution we strive to train the next generation of community change agents, who are poised to make real impact in their communities, particularly around sustainability issues," said Wes Dripps, executive director of the David E. Shi Center for Sustainability. "The need for systems thinkers and change agents is great and will continue to increase. We are truly honored to receive this leadership award and recognition from the U.S. Green Building Council and look forward to working with the USGBC in furthering our collective sustainability efforts on campus and in the community."

Furman has garnered numerous awards over the last decade including a gold STARS rating, a top 10 national ranking among baccalaureate institutions and a

The Shi Center for Sustainability promotes the study and practice of sustainability on campus and in the community. Examples of the center's reach include:

Shi Center Student Fellows program where students engage in sustainability research and action around campus and community-based sustainability projects. Shi Center Fellows have partnered with more than 30 local organizations.

Community Conservation Corps (CCC), a partnership with Habitat for Humanity and Piedmont Natural Gas, provides free weatherization services to low-income homeowners.

Partnership with United Way of Greenville County to assess gentrification in the county, and a collaborative study with the City of Greenville Community Development office to evaluate zoning as a barrier to high-density residential development.

A 6-acre solar farm, the largest on a South Carolina college campus, is moving Furman toward carbon neutrality. It is open to the public for those interested in learning about solar power generation. A small herd of sheep onsite helps control grasses around the panels.

The Furman Farm, which is open to the public, is a quarter-acre organic garden with a comprehensive composting program.

"Our strategy for designing and operating our campus facilities in the most efficient and sustainable manner possible has led to the use and adoption of many innovative technologies in our built environment," said Jeff Redder-son, Furman's assistant vice president of facilities. "We appreciate the USGBC for its leadership and for recognizing our sustainability efforts both on and off campus."

Tips for the best financial you in the New Year

(StatePoint) At the same time that Americans are feeling the financial pinch of the holidays, they're gearing up for 2020, with their top two goals being to save more and increase their credit scores, according to a national consumer survey by Experian.

Almost three out of four consumers surveyed are motivated to improve their finances. To reach their New Year goals, survey respondents say they'll spend less money to improve their credit score (59%) and pay off credit card debt (58%).

To help get you started, Experian Boost ambassador, actor and financial empowerment activist, Hill Harper is providing these money tips:

- Create a Financial Blueprint: The first step is to create a blueprint identifying your money, saving and investing goals. Examine your priorities and determine how much money you require to meet your basic needs. From there, you should assess what else you need to be happy and how you can use money as a resource to achieve it.

- Assess the Cost of Being You: If your expenses or debt outpace your income, then it's very difficult to live the best version of your life. Rather than continuously playing catch-up, track your spending to discover new ways to reduce monthly expenses. Apply those savings towards self-investment.

- Understand Smart vs. Dumb Money: Not all dollars spent hold the same value. Knowing the difference between "smart" and "dumb" money is key to building a solid financial foundation, according to Harper, who says that "dumb money" is spending on things like credit card interest or items that lose value quickly, whereas "smart money" is spending on things that pay dividends, like an education or home.

- Control Your Credit Score: A good credit score can help you gain access to capital with better terms at affordable rates. To improve it, pay bills on time and use a resource like Experian Boost, which is a free online tool that allows you to add positive payment history from utility and telecom bills to your Experian credit file, which can increase your score instantly.

- New Year, New You: "We're starting a new decade and what better opportunity is there to do a complete financial makeover?" says Harper, who recommends many other steps that will set you up for financial success, including building an emergency fund, securing health insurance, avoiding debt for unnecessary purchases and investing wisely.

"No one has a crystal ball, but given lower unemployment rates and low interest rates, 2020 could be a good year to have a plan for growth. A diversified portfolio for this next decade is a good portfolio," says Harper. More tips from Harper can be found at www.experian.com/education.

While managing finances can seem intimidating, identifying trouble spots is the first step toward conquering your goals.

Free coding program 'SC Codes' growing in South Carolina

Columbia - The S.C. Department of Commerce's Office of Innovation, in collaboration with Build Carolina, recently announced the expansion of SC Codes, a statewide program designed to provide free access to coding education for all residents.

Announced in 2018 and officially launched earlier this year, SC Codes is a first-of-its-kind, state-funded resource, aiming to connect South Carolinians to the education and resources they need to unlock careers in technology. The program provides free online coding curriculum, as well as mentoring services, to all South Carolina residents through a web platform.

"The continued development of the state's digital workforce is critical to ensuring future economic prosperity," said Secretary of Commerce Bobby Hitt. "SC Codes increases digital literacy skills across the state's entire workforce, allowing South Carolinians to obtain higher-paying jobs and strengthening the economy."

To date, more than 5,300 South Carolinians have registered on the platform and completed 1,500 lessons. The expansion will include growing the number of host sites and partners across the state, adding course content, increasing the number of participants and exploring plans for certifications and apprenticeships.

SC Codes is available to any resident with access to the internet; interested participants can enroll in beginner to advanced curriculum, specifically designed with the demands of the state's industries in mind. Additionally, cohort-style and classroom-led sessions are available through 16 local site partners. Those interested in becoming a student, a mentor or a community partner can find more information at www.sccodes.org.

"We could never have anticipated the response we've had in support of SC Codes from every corner of our state," said Executive Director of Build Carolina Lelia King. "SC Codes is primed to level the playing field for our workforce by removing barriers and increasing access to high-quality coding education. Our expanded partnership with the S.C. Department of Commerce's Office of Innovation will allow us to build upon the great work that has already begun."

Including more than 7,400 tech businesses, South Carolina's tech sector continues to grow, and opportunities for individuals entering the workforce with this type of training are vast. Employment in the state's technology industry represented the 7th highest year-over-year net employment growth in the U.S. last year, with a $12.6 billion contribution to South Carolina's economy, according to Cyberstates™ 2019, an analysis published by CompTIA.

Tips for relieving joint pain in the New Year

(StatePoint) The health benefits of regular exercise are undeniable, and the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services recommends 30 minutes of exercise at least five times per week. However, high-impact exercises like running and weight training can lead to joint pain, especially if you have a joint condition. The good news is that smart exercises with low impact can alleviate joint pain and deliver the same health benefits.

Here are a few tips to consider for a healthy start to 2020:

Keep Moving

Trying to protect your joints by not moving actually does more harm than good. Regular exercise can actually help joint pain and ease symptoms of chronic joint conditions, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. Just be sure to talk to your doctor about your exercise plan before you get started.

Go Low Impact

You don't need to put tremendous weight on your joints or jump up and down in order to break a sweat or elevate your heart rate. When you're already in pain, this type of exercise can actually make things worse. Instead, opt for high-quality, low-impact workouts.

There are now exercise machines available for home use that provide the same quality low-impact workout you'd get in physical therapy. Consider the Teeter FreeStep Recumbent Cross Trainer, a seated exercise machine that takes the weight off the joints while torching calories.

Unlike other recumbent machines which can be bad for the knees, the FreeStep mimics a natural stepping motion that prevents knees from traveling over the toes, as well as stabilizes the back and hips. And you don't have to sacrifice workout quality – in fact, research shows that FreeStep users burn 17.4 percent more calories than when using a recumbent bike at the same level of effort. Beyond calorie burn, it also offers full-body resistance training, which is especially important, as weak muscles can be a root cause of pain.

Hydrate

It may seem obvious, but ensuring that you drink the recommended daily intake of water is vital to reducing pain in your joints.

Proper hydration helps your body eliminate wastes and toxins that can lead to painful joint conditions. Plus, it helps to keep the joints lubricated and flexible, reducing friction and inflammation and helping to maintain healthy tissue.

Stretch Daily

Stretching increases flexibility and range of motion, improves movement and function, reduces pain and stiffness and prevents further injury. Just remember to move slowly and keep it gentle.

At the very least, spend a good five to 10 minutes in the morning stretching your hamstrings, quadriceps, calf muscles and hip flexors.

For a free photo guide to "5 Daily Stretches to Relieve Knee & Joint Pain," plus a code for $75 off the FreeStep (good through January 31, 2020), visit teeter.com/freestep-guide.

Long-term use of advanced driver assistance technologies can result in disengaged drivers

Charlotte, N.C. – Drivers with experience using advanced driver assistance systems (ADAS) like adaptive cruise control and lane-keeping assist, were nearly twice as likely to engage in distracted driving while using the systems compared to when they were driving without the systems, according to new research from the AAA Foundation for Traffic Safety.

Alternatively, drivers with less experience and familiarity using the technology were less likely to drive while distracted with systems activated compared to when systems were not in use. AAA wants drivers to remember that while new driver assistance technologies offer important benefits, drivers must remain active and engaged when behind the wheel to maximize safety.

"This new research reveals that drivers who are experienced in using these systems tend to become complacent which can lead to more distracted behavior behind the wheel which puts themselves and others at risk," said Tiffany Wright, AAA Carolinas spokesperson. "ADAS aims to improve the driving experience, but it's not fool-proof and there still is no substitute for an alert, engaged driver."

Researchers at the AAA Foundation collaborated with Virginia Tech Transportation Institute to analyze video of on-road behaviors for two groups of drivers using advanced driver assistance technology. Individuals in one group owned a vehicle equipped with ADAS and had more experience using the systems while drivers in the other group were given a vehicle equipped with ADAS to use during the 4-week study period and had less experience with the technology.

The research found that drivers who owned their vehicles – and therefore had more familiarity with ADAS technology -- were more likely to drive distracted when these systems were active than when they were not. For example, some observed distracted driving behaviors included texting or adjusting the radio. Meanwhile, drivers with less experience using the technologies were more likely to remain attentive and engaged while the systems were engaged.

Virginia Tech researchers theorize that drivers move through different phases tied to experience using ADAS. First timers start in a novelty phase where they learn and test the technology. These drivers are less inclined to trust the system's function and reliability, so they remain active and engaged while driving. Eventually, drivers reach an experienced user phase where overreliance and too much trust in the systems becomes more common. These drivers are more apt to take their eyes and attention away from the road. Research in other industries shows that pilots and nuclear technicians demonstrate similar patterns of over-reliance on automated systems. These behaviors can eventually lead to distraction.

AAA offers three simple steps for how to ACE your next vehicle rental or purchase:

Always remain active and engaged when using ADAS technologies like lane-keep assist or adaptive cruise control.

Commit to knowing what ADAS technologies are installed on your vehicle and how they work.

Expect that the advanced driver assistance technologies in your vehicle have limitations.

AAA Carolinas, an affiliate of the American Automobile Association, is a not-for-profit organization that serves more than 2.2 million member and the public with travel, automobile and insurance services while being an advocate for the safety and security of all travelers.

Decade of ruggedness: Celebrating environmental studies at Wofford

Ferguson, who has been at the college for 40 years, was just published in Nature Scientific Reports. He will continue that research on platinum levels in sediments in the Midlands of South Carolina that supports an extraterrestrial impact event that occurred nearly 13,000 years ago. He's also working with several other research teams, including one that's studying the Glendale area near the Goodall Environmental Studies Center.

Lane will be promoting another book, "Seven Days on the Santee Delta," with two more on the way: a second novel and a non-fiction work combining autobiographical experiences growing up in Spartanburg County with Ferguson's research on buried organic deposits. Lane is also working on another poetry manuscript.

The department's faculty also includes Dr. Amy Telligman, assistant professor, who came to the college as part of the Milliken Sustainability Initiative at Wofford College. Dr. Jennifer Bradham and another tenure-track faculty member will join the department next year.

"Now we have a food systems lab in the works in the Chandler Center for Environmental Studies that Amy is starting, and our students will get hands-on experience — from garden to stove. That's a direction that we didn't anticipate 10 years ago," says Savage. "Who knows what our other new faculty will bring to the department? It will be amazing."

Goettee says the conversations she has had with the environmental studies faculty after class or during their labs make the department special. "They've guided me toward opportunities that I never would have considered for myself, and they all foster a culture of ruggedness," she says.

"They're right there with you. Getting in the water. Carrying kayaks. Doing the labs. We've been out there in the rain, and still, somehow it's fun," says McGaughey.

According to Savage, Lane was rallying a class before a particularly wet, cold lab at the Goodall Environmental Studies Center when he first used the "culture of ruggedness" phrase. It's been the department's motto — and a point of pride — ever since.

Preparing the soil

EDITED FROM THE GREENING OF WOFFORD: A NARRATIVE HISTORY BY JOHN LANE, CLASS OF 1977, 2009

Biology and geology were two of the first requirements in the college's founding curriculum. The first documented field experience occurred in 1874 when Warren DuPré took 15 members of the senior class to Lake Lure, N.C., to study the effects of an earthquake. In 1964, Dr. John Harrington joined the faculty after a distinguished career as a professor at Southern Methodist University, petroleum geologist and consultant. He brought a robust, hands-on, field-based approach to learning about the environment and taught Wofford students to "see a world" broadly and across disciplines. He inspired students such as renowned naturalist Dr. Rudy Mancke [class of 1967], as well as Ferguson and Lane.

There was also Dr. Ray Leonard, who taught animal ecology; Dr. Gibbes Patton, Wofford's first full-time botanist, who was friends with pioneering ecologist Eugene Odom; Dr. B.G. Stephens [class of 1957], a chemistry professor who taught the first environmental science classes to nonscience majors; Dr. C.L. "Ab" Abercrombie, who taught sociology, but also held degrees in biology and mathematics; and Dr. Jack Seitz, who wrote the book on global issues.

In 1970, Wofford received a three-year, $295,000 grant from the National Science Foundation for curriculum innovation. With the money, the college established a junior/senior seminar during Interim, a summer research program and a "permanent experimental sciences study group" to meet and discuss "problems arising within and between the different experimental science departments." The grant also funded the purchase of equipment to "improve electronics instruction" and an overflight program as part of a geology laboratory. An interesting footnote: The geology overflights were done from a rented DC-3 that had flown Winston Churchill in World War II.

There was a core group of environmental activists as well. In the 1970s, Dr. Linton Dunson, professor of government, joined Patton on a statewide pollution task force, and Dr. John Fowler, also in government, and Patton began the "Friends of Lawson's Fork" to protect the watershed in which the college is located. Harrington and others joined the Lawson's Fork protection efforts.

Patton, Dunson and Fowler taught an early Interim, Environmental Problems and Land Use. Duane Stober, professor of physical education, offered River Voyagers, an Interim during which 15 students and two guides paddled 350 river miles from Spartanburg to the sea. Other Interims to explore environmental studies included Field Work in Archaeology, Water: Its Ecology and Politics, and Internships in Resource Management.

Ferguson's return to Wofford continued the tradition of field-based study. His introductory geology sequence included 22 field labs and two overnight experiences during the year and further widened the college's variety of courses that had an environmental emphasis. More and more faculty began incorporating environmental studies into their courses. Faculty in the departments of biology and chemistry were joined by faculty in economics, sociology, modern languages, English and philosophy. Environmental reading groups, art and speakers became more and more common on campus.

Several attempts to start a major in environmental studies failed, but an interest had been building in interdisciplinary majors. Lane (English) and Dr. Ellen Goldey (biology) taught courses and a learning community on the nature and culture of water that combined the sciences and the humanities. Then Goldey secured a grant from the NSF for curriculum innovation, and the college formed a group to develop and propose a major in environmental studies, which would incorporate the college's geology department. In addition to Ferguson, who had been chairman of the geology department, and Lane, the group included Dr. Caleb Arrington (chemistry), Dr. Laura Barbas Rhoden (Spanish), Dr. Cissy Fowler (sociology), Dr. Mackey Salley [class of 1995] (physics) and Dr. Philip Swicegood (finance).

Out of this fertile ground grew environmental studies.

Onward

The college's environmental studies program received another boost in 2015 when the college received a $4.25 million grant from the Romill Foundation to create the Milliken Sustainability Sessions From Hawaii to Spartanburg (Dr. Dave Pittman, class of 1994, psychology) and the Biodiversity of Costa Rica (Dr. Lori Cruze, biology, and Dr. Kimberly Hall, English). An Interim trip with community partners is planned for January 2020.

The student innovation fundis up and running and administered through The Space in the Mungo Center. The grant also funded student workers in an urban garden in the Northside.

The grant has funded a series of summer charettes, or meetings, in which campus and community stakeholders look at challenges and map solutions.

Construction is underway on a new living-learning community on College Street in the Northside, with occupancy scheduled for spring 2020. The seven-apartment unit will house 13.

The college's energy metering and monitoring systemis in place, and the college has improved HVAC and lighting systems to realize energy savings.

The Center for Community-Based Learning now coordinates partnerships in the Northside and Glendale communities as part of the initiative, and faculty have developed new courses in human and environmental sustainability.

The college purchased a house in the Glendale community, adjacent to the Goodall Environmental Studies Center. The space includes an apartment for visiting speakers or college guests as well as office and meeting space.

The grant has funded four Interim travel/ study experiences, including Thinking Like An Island: Sustainability Sessions From Hawaii to Spartanburg (Dr. Dave Pittman, class of 1994, psychology) and the Biodiversity of Costa Rica (Dr. Lori Cruze, biology, and Dr. Kimberly Hall, English). An Interim trip with community partners is planned for January 2020.

Are your children using mobile devices safely and responsibly?

(StatePoint) Does your child have a digital device? They are in good company. Fifty-three percent of children own a smartphone by age 11, and 84 percent of teenagers have their own phones, according to Common Sense Media.

While there are many great benefits to being digitally connected at a young age, there are certain issues families should address. Consider these suggestions for safer, more responsible mobile device use:

1) Discuss Privilege and Trust. Have a casual, open-ended chat about the privilege and responsibilities of device ownership. Ask questions about whether their friends own devices, and what they're most excited to use it for.

2) Set Clear Agreements. Setting clear rules about device usage is essential. Depending on your child's age, you may agree that the device only to be used for certain purposes (for example: contacting you, FaceTiming relatives, doing homework). Even with older kids and teens, it's important to discuss appropriate online behavior, healthy digital habits and "screen etiquette." Consider putting together a "contract" to be displayed somewhere visible.

3) Buy a Protective Case and Warranty. Devices are easy to lose or break -- especially by kids. Consider buying a durable case and screen protector as additional presents, and definitely purchase a warranty through your carrier or a third party. Finally, make sure you have a location monitoring app installed on your child's device, which offers peace of mind, saves headaches coordinating pickups and can help you locate lost devices in a pinch.

4) Download a Parental Guidance App. Download a parental guidance app onto your own device, such as OurPact, which allows you to install a simple profile on your child's device. Then, you can remotely set up automated schedules for when internet and apps are unavailable, or block access manually to the device for a specified period of time. With such features as URL whitelisting and blacklisting, daily screen time allowances and iMessage/SMS blocking, you can be engaged with how your child uses their device, letting you enjoy the peace of mind knowing they aren't playing Angry Birds or Fruit Ninja past bedtime when they should be snoozing. Available at the iOS App Store and Google Play Store, parents can also sign up for an account at www.ourpact.com.

5) Screen Applications for Quality. Make sure all apps installed on your child's device pass your approval. It's good practice to have the App Store blocked using a tool like OurPact. This way, when your child wants to install a new app, you can research it together.

6) Practice What You Preach! Kids are more likely to respond to actions over words, so make sure that you're setting a good example. Don't send emails at the dinner table. Never text and drive. Make eye contact when you talk. Last but not least: always put relationships -- especially with your children -- before devices.

For peace of mind, be sure your child is using their digital device safely and responsibly.

Why a personalized diet can help you achieve better results

(StatePoint) From custom-designed sneakers to tailor-made sunglasses, the trend of personalization is going head-to-toe, and for good reason, making its way to the world of weight loss and wellness.

Specifically, researchers have been studying two converging topics in recent years. One is the importance of body type in determining the combination of fats, carbohydrates and protein that will provide the best results for a given individual. The other is the variability of results associated with a single diet -- the idea that if two people start the same diet at the same time, their results could be drastically different.

On top of that, consumer research shows that people overwhelmingly prefer personalized experiences. Sixty percent of consumers agree that personalization is essential to weight loss and overall wellness.

Here's what to know about why personalized diets are becoming so popular and how to find the right diet for you:

The Importance of Body

Type

The places your body stores excess fat may be the single greatest predictor of health outcomes. This is the concept behind Nutrisystem's assessment of the four most common body types: "Apple," "Pear," "Hourglass" and "Rectangle."

"We're going a bit old school here, because these categories have stood the test of time for a reason. They provide crucial information on how you respond to food intake and can help you to adjust what you eat based on your goals," says Courtney McCormick, corporate dietitian at Nutrisystem.

Body type can also influence how macronutrients like fat, protein, and carbs are processed. To fulfill your individual needs, first determine your body type, food preferences and goals, then look for a weight loss plan that takes these important factors into consideration, such as Nutrisystem.

One Size Does Not Fit All The DIETFITS study, a large, randomized research study comparing low-fat versus low-carb dietary patterns found no difference in weight loss between them. But drilling down into the data, one can see great variability. Some dieters gained weight while others lost a lot. But it's not always about weight outcomes, as recent research has shown that factors such as body shape may play a bigger role in the determinants of health risks than body weight alone.

For instance, a woman who is apple-shaped tends to carry her extra weight in the mid-section. She would see best results on a lower-glycemic nutrition plan that is lower in refined carbs and higher in healthy fats and protein.

"Research shows that one size does not fit all when it comes to weight loss and disease prevention," says McCormick. "That's why we've created a unique, personalized approach that's easy to follow and designed to help participants lose weight and get healthy."

For more insights on how to personalize your diet and maximize results, visit leaf.nutrisystem.com.

While it's no secret that achieving one's weight loss goals is challenging, personalizing your plan can help make things easier, ultimately providing you a greater chance of success.

Myths vs. facts of landing a skilled trade job that will launch your career

(StatePoint) With the demand for skilled trade workers growing nationwide, you may be looking to launch your career, change professional paths, or hone current skills in order to advance in your industry.

As you go about the process, consider these few myths and facts about landing a skilled trade job:

- Myth: It will be hard to find training in my local area.

- Fact: There are numerous free resources available to connect you with local training opportunities. Veterans and their spouses for example, can seek career assistance from organizations such as amvets.org. In the case of the HVACR industry, locating training organizations in your zip code is as simple as visiting natex.org, which provides online services to English and Spanish speakers, as well as certification and recertification.

- Myth: All training programs are pretty much the same.

- Fact: Not all certification programs offer the same quality education, nor are they associated with the same breadth of job opportunities. Those in the HVACR industry, for example, can set themselves apart by getting North American Technician Excellence (NATE) training.

"Not only do contractors prefer working with NATE-certified technicians, consumers look for this certification as well because it ensures that a knowledgeable, well-trained and highly experienced technician will service their home heating or cooling system," says

Anthony Spagnoli, NATE's director of training and education.

- Myth: Skilled trade careers don't offer room for growth.

- Fact: Skilled trade careers are in especially high demand today, offering long-term job security, a good living and room for advancement. To learn more about existing growth opportunities, tune into the podcast "Blue is the New White." Available for download on Apple Podcasts and Spotify, this is also a good resource for those seeking to get their foot in the door.

- Myth: Career support will be hard to come by once I receive my certification.

- Fact: Connecting with a seasoned professional who can act as your mentor is a great way to build relationships, network and learn as you go. This is especially important for those who have traditionally been underrepresented in a given industry. You can find mentors on-the-job, at industry events and through online resources such as Women in HVACR, which among its initiatives, connects young women in the industry with mentors. visitswomeninhvacr.org/mentorship to learn more.
