Spartanburg photographer to exhibit images of the American West

Spartanburg photographer John Lever is exhibiting a striking collection of photography -- Etched in Stone -- at Artists Collective | Spartanburg, giving patrons extensive insight to the majestic landscapes of the American West.

The some-18 prints will be on free public display through November 28 at the Collective, located at 578 W. Main St. in Spartanburg. The gallery is open Tuesday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Guests are required to wear face masks and to physically distance themselves. Because of the pandemic, the gallery will not hold a reception, and it will not participate in the city's monthly ArtWalk.

It took Lever about six months to create this exhibition that is subtitled "Images from Southern Utah and the Grand Canyon." It includes prints from 8 by 10 inches to large canvas prints. All of the work will be for sale, ranging from $70 to $200.

New software a game changer for Child Welfare Services case management

In late October the pilot implementation of SafeMeasures® was held, a partnership initiative between SCDSS and the National Council on Crime and Delinquency (NCCD).

SafeMeasures is a web-based reporting program designed to help frontline Child Welfare Services workers use data to manage their caseloads more efficiently and effectively. This tool also amplifies the agency's overarching goal of creating a work culture dedicated to Continuous Quality Improvement (CQI).

NCCD designed SafeMeasures so case managers can focus the most of their time serving the needs of the children and families on their caseloads. This powerful, easy-to-use application utilizes data entered into the agency's Child and Adult Protective Services System (CAPSS) to create real-time, interactive dashboards to show case managers what work they need to do and what work has been completed.

The SafeMeasures pilot initiative engages nearly 100 Investigations and Family Preservation professionals, with the official, full launch of the program planned for January 2021. Upon successful integration of SafeMeasures in these units, broader use of the application could be considered for other SCDSS program areas.

Converse awarded 750K grant for Biomedical Research from National Institutes of Health

Converse College has been awarded grants of over $750,000 to support its faculty-led biomedical research and expand research opportunities for students. Funded by the National Institutes of Health (NIH) through the National Institute of General Medical Sciences (NIGMS), the grants are a portion of the $18.9 million that has been awarded to South Carolina institutions upon NIH's renewal of the South Carolina IDeA Networks of Biomedical Research Excellence (SC INBRE) to support biomedical research and infrastructure in the state.

The first grant, secured through the efforts of Dr. Neval Erturk, Professor of Biology at Converse, supports overall biomedical research in the college's Department of Biology, Chemistry and Physics in the amount of $500,000 over a period of five years. The grant will be applied to faculty and student research across pressing issues in biomedical sciences, such as drug metabolism, obesity, toxicology, biosensor development, and the biology of addiction.

Converse also received a one-time $40,000 grant to specifically support and enhance the college's experimental facilities and laboratories with new supplies, essential gear and test subject facilities, further strengthening the programs at the institution. Additional facilities and administrative indirect funds of at least $125,000 will be granted to the college over a five-year period to support operational costs.

Spartanburg Gallery awards $4,500 to 8 Art Exhibition Winners

The second annual 2020 juried art exhibition presented by Artists Collective | Spartanburg has eight winners from the Carolinas, awarding a total of $4,500 in cash prizes.

The winners were announced virtually Saturday, Sept. 26. First place was taken by Gregory Wilkin for his oil painting -- Harriet Hancock Center, Melrose Heights, Columbia.

Second place was taken by Seth Scheving of Anderson, for his work Ignorance Was Bliss.

In third place is Bennett Stowe for her impressionistic Dining Room.

In addition to the first, second, and third place winners, there are five merits award winners: Wendy Converse of Salem, SC; Tomya Henderson of Greenville, SC; Aldo Muzzarelli of Mauldin, SC; Lynne Tanner of Rutherfordton, NC; and Mary Hannah Willingham of Fountain Inn, SC.

Dr. Gregory Colbath is heading efforts to providing his patients with specially designed bags for the disposal of unused painkillers.

Spartanburg Regional Foundation grant addresses problem of unused opioid pills

Courtesy of Spartanburg Regional Healthcare System

By Baker Maultsby

The U.S. is in the grip of an opioid epidemic.

Opioid overdoses killed nearly 47,000 Americans in 2018, according to the CDC. Many more suffer from addiction or substance use disorder -- as many as 2.3 million Americans, the National Institutes of Health estimates.

Those suffering come from all walks of life. They live in large cities, in suburbs and in small towns.

One local physician has ideas for keeping opioids out of the hands of people who might abuse them. And thanks to a grant from the Spartanburg Regional Foundation, he's got one solution in the bag.

Spartanburg Regional orthopaedic surgeon Gregory Colbath, MD, provides his patients with a specially designed bag for the disposal of any unused painkillers. Dr. Colbath practices at Medical Group of the Carolinas -- Orthopaedics -- Skylyn. Created by a company called Detera, the bags include a charcoal packet that, when mixed with warm water, breaks down and deactivates the medicine.

The patient can then seal the bag and throw it away without risking narcotics flowing into the local water supply or being found and used by others.

In 2020, the Spartanburg Regional Foundation awarded Spartanburg Regional Healthcare System a $20,000 grant to purchase 5,400 of the deactivation bags. Dr.

Colbath is helping spearhead the effort and plans to provide these bags for his patients and to distribute them to other doctors who may be interested.

"I'm very grateful to the Foundation for this grant," Dr. Colbath said. "It's really going to help protect our patients and others in the community as we fight the problem of opioid addiction."

Dr. Colbath prescribes painkillers, including opioid pills, to patients undergoing hip or knee replacements. But as he has come to better understand their addictive potential, he urges patients to exercise caution.

As part of pre-operation discussions with patients, Dr. Colbath talks about responsible opioid usage and the proper method for disposing of unused pills.

"At first, I thought it would be a difficult discussion to have with patients, but it has been easy," Dr. Colbath said. "People have become more and more aware of opioid addiction. So many families, including here in our community, have been affected."

The problem of unused pills

In 2018, doctors wrote more than 168 million prescriptions for opioid painkillers. It is considered a good thing when patients don't need to take all of the pills they've been prescribed.

But a problem remains: Unused pills can fall into the hands of the wrong people.

For example, teenagers might find the pills and want to experiment -- or sell them to friends who abuse drugs. Or patients might save the pills and use them later without medical supervision.

Experts estimate that there are as many as three billion unused opioid pills sitting in medicine cabinets, toiletry bag and purses, or floating around the streets in the United States.

Adjusting his approach, curbing the crisis

In preparing patients for the post-surgery recovery process, Dr. Colbath has adjusted his methodology. He promotes the use of over-the-counter medicines, such as ibuprofen, and stresses the importance of movement and exercise. And he has reduced the number of narcotic pills he prescribes to patients.

If patients don't use all of the prescribed medication, Dr. Colbath urges them to use the Detera deactivation and disposal bags.

Spartanburg Regional physicians, including Dr. Colbath, have given presentations to local groups and on webinars, hopes to spread awareness.

He understands that it's only one part of curbing the opioid crisis.

"It's a great way to start a conversation with patients and a reminder for them when they have leftover pills," Dr. Colbath said. "And, so far, nearly 100 percent of my patients have said they've used the bags or plan to. I'm really pleased with the response."

Cactus is a prickly treat

I was shopping in an ethnic grocery store when I saw a huge pile of fresh Prickly Pear cactus pads in the produce section. Prickly Pear cactus is thought to be native to Mexico and is eaten as a vegetable. The cactus is called "nopai" in Spanish, and the pads or stems are called "nopales." Mexico exports 40,000 pounds of nopales pads to Texas every day. They're also grown as an export crop in Central America and Israel.

The pear-shaped fruit on the ends of the nopal pads are called "tunas," and range in color from a greenish-white to purple. If the tuna fruit are sweet, they're eaten raw or used to make wine or as a sweet syrup. If sour, they're cooked and incorporated into a variety of recipes. I've always wondered about the first adventurous cook to take this prickly crop and turn it into a delightful dish!

Preparing the fresh cactus pads takes time and care, as all of the prickly spines and thorns must be carefully removed. After the pads have been prepped, they're grilled or boiled until tender. When sliced thinly, the nopales are called "nopalitos." They look like French-cut green beans and have a similar texture.

Fried Cactus Salad

1 cup fresh nopalitos, rinsed, drained and patted dry

1/3 cup all-purpose flour

2/3 cup cornmeal

1 teaspoon chili powder

1 1/2 teaspoon salt

1 teaspoon ground black pepper

1/8 teaspoon cayenne

1 cup vegetable oil

1. To make the fried cactus, place flour, cornmeal, 1 teaspoon salt, black pepper and cayenne pepper in a small bag. Shake the bag to mix the ingredients. Drop the rinsed and drained nopalitos into the bag. Shake until the strips are well-coated.

2. Heat oil in a medium-sized skillet, about 2 to 3 minutes. Fry the strips until they are golden brown. Place strips on a paper towel to drain, sprinkle with the remaining salt, and set aside.

$60 million transformational gift elevates business at Clemson

The nation's top-rated business colleges have earned their reputation for excellence by building powerful programs that look beyond teaching the fundamentals and instead focus their energies on making a broad impact on today's borderless business world.

Building such a powerhouse – and doing it in a manner consistent with Clemson's land-grant mission of service to the state of South Carolina – has been a priority for President Jim Clements since his arrival in 2013.

With this gift from longtime South Carolina philanthropists and friends of the University Wilbur O. "Billy" and Ann Powers, these cutting-edge plans have a home under the roof of the newly named Wilbur O. and Ann Powers College of Business, which is housed in a new state-of-the-art building that opened this semester.

"This building and this gift are game changers for Clemson and the Wilbur O. and Ann Powers College of Business. Billy and Ann are longtime supporters of the University, and, once again, they have stepped up for Clemson. We are so grateful for their generosity and vision," Clements said. "This is an incredible milestone for Clemson, not only because it is the largest gift in our history but also because it will truly transform the way we teach business at Clemson. This gift will enable the Wilbur O. and Ann Powers College of Business to reach new heights, growing to become one of the country's best institutions for educating the next generation of global business leaders."

A reflection of their business acumen and personal principles, Billy and Ann gave the gift so that they might make a difference in the lives of Clemson's students. With its signature programs and a new, best-in-class facility, the Wilbur O. and Ann Powers College of Business is more than a gateway to Clemson University. It serves as a catalyst for commerce across South Carolina and enterprise around the world.

The power of programs

With highly relevant business skills taught in all majors; experiential, interdisciplinary learning; collaborative teamwork; internships; and cross-cultural/study abroad programs, the Wilbur O. and Ann Powers College of Business is positioned to make a significant impact for generations of Clemson students and South Carolina industries. It also serves as a major research hub for world-class scholars.

"The generous support from the Powers family enables critical faculty research, professorships and fellowships; provides needed student scholarships; and enhances the prestige of our business degrees for years to come," said Dean Wendy York. "The sun is rising on a new era of business education at Clemson University."

The gift will allow the College to attract leading faculty through endowed professorships, as well as provide significant merit and need-based financial aid to students in order to grow future generations of South Carolina business leaders.

In addition, the gift also will propel many of the College's signature programs, including:

Business Analytics

Today's business world is driven by data. With a proper understanding of relevant data, managers can make more informed decisions that can help their businesses succeed. The business analytics program instills critical analytical skills needed for strategic, data-driven decision making. With each major featuring its own tailored set of skills, business analytics primes students to collect, interpret and apply data to make a significant contribution to businesses large and small. Graduating students with working knowledge of business analytics makes them highly attractive to hiring corporate partners and organizations.

Sales Innovation

The sales innovation program aims to develop proficiency in understanding techniques for effective sales, especially in the service, technical and health care fields. The program, and the collaborative efforts coming out of it, is on its way to becoming a national hub for excellence in sales education and research. The efforts of this program seek to drive change in processes and systems for better customer experiences and organizational growth.

Value Chain and Advanced Manufacturing

The value chain and advanced manufacturing program leverages existing faculty expertise and industry needs to create market-relevant educational programs. Team collaboration incorporates the business, science and engineering disciplines, exposing students to cross-college cooperation and vendor relationship management found in a diverse, global workplace.

Entrepreneurship

Entrepreneurial studies and entrepreneurial thinking are critical in startups as well as established businesses. The entrepreneurship program engages all colleges to co-deliver interdisciplinary coursework. In addition, the program leverages on-campus organizations, entrepreneurial alumni and venture funding sources to complete the ecosystem.

Brand Marketing and Graphics

The dual-tower, five-story Wilbur O. and Ann Powers College of Business features 176,000 square feet of building space. As part of the gift, the right structure will be named in honor of their grandson, Chandler L. Burns. Burns was a 2015 graduate of Clemson who died tragically after a short illness in 2016.

In the brand marketing and graphics communications programs, students are prepared with market-relevant skills. There are hands-on experiences at the Erwin Center for Brand Communications, Department of Graphic Communications, Sonoco Institute of Packaging Design and Graphics and Sonoco FRESH (food packaging). From branding to positioning, from digital marketing to applied materials production, students learn and develop best practices under the guidance of industry specialists. Through these programs, students make a significant impact on current corporate partnerships.

Leadership

Inspired by the high bar set by the Thomas F. Chapman Leadership Scholars program, this focus on leadership builds upon Clemson's history of producing principled leaders of business and industry and now exemplifies the business expertise and ethics of Billy and Ann Powers. Dean York stresses that leadership "is a choice, not a title" and that those skills are what help students make a difference in their future positions, regardless of their majors. The program focuses on the responsibility to make a positive difference wherever you are.

Economics

The Capitalism Institute and Hayek Center are unique in teaching the values of free enterprise. In the world-ranked economics program, nationally noted scholars support research and the Ph.D. program in the John E. Walker Department of Economics. As economics is a way of thinking, this program teaches students how the application of principles affects business decisions, public policy issues and everyday life, and how trade in open or free markets, and the surrounding activities, impact economies by providing growth opportunities.

MBA
Our MBA program is

2020 Fall semester.

President Clements, Dean York and others knew it would take more than a new building alone to elevate Clemson's business college to national recognition as a top-public program.

The vision for a 21st-century business school requires a gathering of sharp-minded thinkers working together on a new mission to equip students with the skills, knowledge and values to thrive and make an impact on the business world. From practitioners, associate professors and tenured faculty to department heads, those inside the College required exceptional expertise and dedication in order to teach students how to succeed in a dynamic global economy.

Included in those great thinkers are longtime philanthropists Billy and Ann Powers, also people of vision who speak often and openly about the value of setting lofty goals. They quickly recognized the College's mission and saw how it aligned with their shared desire to build something without equal in South Carolina. In turn, they gave the largest gift ever awarded to Clemson University and one of the largest gifts to a public institution of higher education in the state. With this gift, the Wilbur O. and Ann Powers College of Business is positioned to be a major contributor to the University's rise in stature and academic relevance.

Dean York and her staff and faculty will employ interdisciplinary collaboration across departments and colleges to further the development of ethical leadership skills and entrepreneurial thinking in students.

"The building and our academic direction are becoming a launchpad for students to become revolutionary change agents who will make positive contributions to business and industry in South Carolina, across our nation and beyond," said Dean York.

Work ethic

Regardless of the classes students take, the major they pursue and opportunities they choose to engage with, donor Billy Powers explains that a single piece of advice is relevant to anyone pursuing college and a dream: "Apply yourself the best you can with the means you have," he said.

"You can't start on top. It's a learning process," he continued. "Then you've got to have initiative and discipline to reach your goals."

But the key to success, Powers said, is hard work. "You always want to do the very best you are able to do, and if you plan well, you can accomplish more. This gift is about helping Clemson students grow and be the best they can be."

Visionary leadership and a transformational gift that enabled that vision to come to life position the Wilbur O. and Ann Powers College of Business as a place that will prime innovation, foster scholarship and impact global business for the foreseeable future in South Carolina and beyond.

"Since the original gift that created the University, there has never been a more transformational gift in the history of Clemson than this," said President Clements. "We are incredibly grateful to Billy and Ann for their generosity."

Convenient, functional gear prepares you for adventures or emergencies

(StatePoint) The new normal and natural disasters are dominating the headlines. At the same time, consumers have embraced socially distant adventure travel. Whatever your reasons for wanting to be prepared, easy to carry, functional gear will prepare you for what's to come. Here's how:

Secure Packing

Whether you're backpacking on your favorite trail or evacuating from a disaster zone, knowing your gear is protected from mishaps and extreme weather is important.

Keep organizational packing tools handy, such as Reusable Rubber Twist Gear Ties, that provide a versatile way to wrap and hang items. It may also be helpful to store a few Slidelock Aluminum S-Biners in your to-go bag to secure keys and water bottles.

When it comes to waterproofing, gear should endure the harshest elements. That's where options like the CorSurf 25L Waterproof Dry Backpack come into play. It floats and features special pockets to protect electronic equipment. Finally, expand your travel possibilities with a bag designed to adhere to TSA's Liquids Rule for carry-ons, such as Nite Ize's RunOff Waterproof 3-1-1 Pouch.

Its gusseted bottom keeps travel-sized toiletries organized while protecting against leaks.

Safe Water

Safe tap water is not a given on outdoor adventure trips or during natural disasters when local water sources can become compromised.

Having a low-maintenance, long-term means to filter water, whether sheltering in place or on the road, gives you peace of mind. Ultralight and durable, the LifeStraw personal water filter straw lasts for up to 1,000 gallons of water -- enough drinking water for an individual for over five years, and protects against bacteria, parasites, microplastics, dirt, sand and cloudiness. Another good choice for personal use --and great for hikes -- is the LifeStraw Go Insulated Stainless Steel water filter bottle, which not only protects against contaminants, but also keeps water cold for hours.

With family or friends? Look for water filtration designed to accommodate many people, such as the LifeStraw Mission water purifier, which features a built-in backwashing system and removes viruses, bacteria and parasites.

Illumination

Maintain visibility during power outages or when enjoying nature with battery-operated light sources.

A durable, tactical flashlight is a must. Try the INOVA T8R Powerswitch Rechargeable Dual Color LED Flashlight to preserve night vision while pitching a tent or looking for the circuit breaker. For a hands-free option, consider a lightweight headlamp with a rechargeable battery. The Biolite HeadLamp 330 sits flush on the forehead and its moisture-wicking fabric keeps the wearer cool and dry.

Finally, let tools pull double-duty. The Radiant 314 Rechargeable Lantern will not only illuminate your home or campsite, its built-in power bank allows you to charge devices anywhere, handy for staying connected when it's most vital.

Protection

From emergency uses (e.g. self-defense) to the mundane (e.g. slicing fruit), you never know when you'll need the utility of a pocket knife. Pack light with the Nite Ize Doohickey Key Chain Knife. Its 2-inch blade offers everyday portability.

Insect bites can be a major health hazard and an unwanted factor during weekend getaways or emergency scenarios. For naturally-derived DEET-free solutions, pack Natrapel Lemon Eucalyptus insect repellent. Individually-wrapped Natrapel Picaridin insect repellent wipes provide all-day protection from ticks and mosquitoes.

A high-quality first aid kit is vital for any household and the Adventure Medical Kits Mountain Backpacker contains hospital-quality contents ideal for multi-day adventures.

Whether you love adventure travel or just value emergency preparedness, great gear is essential.

Upstate leaders graduate from the Riley Institute's award-winning diversity program

Greenville - Upon graduating this month from the Riley Institute's Diversity Leaders Initiative (DLI), 41 leaders from across the Upstate have new tools and perspectives to help leverage diversity to improve organizational outcomes and drive social and economic progress in South Carolina.

These individuals, all members of the 29th DLI class in the region, took part in intensive discussions and scenario analyses that allowed them to openly examine sensitive issues related to diversity and inclusion with fellow leaders, explore "blind spots," and gain tools to develop diversity strategies within their own organizations. DLI has become a cornerstone of Furman University's Riley Institute as more than 2,300 leaders from across the state have graduated since the program's inception 17 years ago.

Graduates of DLI become Riley Fellows, members of a powerful cross-sector of South Carolinians that includes corporate CEOs, legislators, superintendents, religious and nonprofit heads, and business and community leaders.

While the class was originally scheduled to conclude in the spring after beginning in January, it was put on hold as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic and resumed virtually in September. The pandemic, along with the current call for racial justice, underscores the need for such a program, said Dr. Donald Gordon, executive director of the Riley Institute.

"The extreme hardship brought on by the pandemic has exacerbated the existing social and economic divisions that we address through our Diversity Leaders Initiative," Gordon said. "The road ahead will present its share of challenges, but our new group of Riley Fellows are uniquely positioned to create real-world solutions within their own enterprises."

Classes are facilitated by expert Juan Johnson, an independent consultant who was The Coca-Cola Company's first-ever vice president for diversity strategy.

DLI participants are selected through a rigorous application and interview process after being nominated by existing Riley Fellows. They are accepted based on their capacity to create impact within their organizations and communities.

As part of the program, participants work alongside classmates to develop a capstone project that addresses a specific community need.

One of the five capstone groups sought to address the learning gap for low-income elementary students who lack access to print materials at home. Participants organized a book drive that led to the collection of 1,000 inspirational books —double the group's goal —for children attending Spartanburg County District 7 schools.

Combating the social isolation older adults are experiencing as a result of the pandemic, another group helped connect members of Active Day of Greer, an adult daycare center, with students of Riverside Middle School. Through video chats and letter-writing, older adults remain productive and valued in the community while igniting a sense of community responsibility in young, emerging leaders.

In addition to the Upstate, DLI classes are selected annually in the Midlands and Lowcountry. Each class is crafted to reflect the diverse demographics in South Carolina.

VETERANS POST

by Freddy Groves

Blue Water Sailors and Agent Orange

Blue Water sailors, heads up. The Department of Veterans Affairs has now made it easier for you to file a claim for Agent Orange exposure. Starting Jan. 1, 2020, The Blue Water Navy Vietnam Veterans Act of 2019 (PL 116-25) extends coverage to those who weren't inland but were shipboard. The difficulty has been gathering all the records and logs required to prove your location.

Now the National Archives and Records Administration has digitized declassified Navy and Coast Guard deck logs (aka ship or captain's logs) from 1956-1978 and put them online to make it easier for veterans to validate their claims. This includes the hospital ship USS Sanctuary.

Some particulars:

• If you were within 12 nautical miles of the coast of Vietnam from Jan. 9, 1962 to May 7, 1975, or in the Korean Demilitarized Zone between Jan. 1, 1967 and Aug. 31, 1971, you qualify.

• If you have any of these medical conditions, you qualify: AL amyloidosis, chronic B-cell leukemias, chloracne, diabetes mellitus Type 2, Hodgkin's disease, ischemic heart disease, multiple myeloma, non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, Parkinson's disease, peripheral neuropathy, porphyria cutanea tarda, prostate cancer, respiratory cancers and soft tissue sarcomas.

• If you've never filed, go ahead and do it quickly. Use VA Form 21-526EZ, Application for Disability Compensation and Related Compensation Benefits. If you did file and were turned down, try again, and use VA Form 20-0995, Decision Review Request: Supplemental Claim. Payment is retroactive to when you first filed. Priority is given to those with a terminal condition.
