With more than 1,200 pieces – paintings; prints, watercolors and sketches on paper; Chinese ink rubbings; and Asian, Middle Eastern and African artifacts and objects – Wofford College's Fine Arts Collection has served as a valuable educational, historical and cultural treasure-trove throughout the college's history.

Acquired from the college's foundational days in the mid-19th century to today, the collection includes 300 works – almost a complete collection – by American Southern artist Julia Elizabeth Tolbert, some 200 pieces of Chinese ink rubbings, a collection of Hungarian paintings donated by the late Sandor Teszler and Drs. Francis and Livia Robicsek, and a variety of other artworks and objects.

Some 50 selections of this vast fine arts collection now are on display on both levels of the Richardson Family Art Museum in the Rosalind Sallenger Richardson Center for the Arts.

The exhibition is open to visitors, free of charge, Tuesday through Saturday from 1 to 5 p.m., with extended hours to 9 p.m. on Thursday; the museum is closed Sunday and Monday. The museum and the Richardson Family Art Gallery are included in the Spartanburg ArtWalk on the third Thursday of each month.

Harrison named regional director for South Carolina DSS

Nikita Harrison was recently selected to be the regional director for S.C. Department of Social Services Child Welfare Region I. This region includes Anderson, Cherokee, Greenville, Oconee, and Spartanburg counties.

"Harrison comes to this position with extensive child welfare and academic experience as well as proven leadership and management experience," said Taron Davis, Deputy State Director of Child Welfare Services Division. Hub City Empty Bowls gears up for Soup Day, Oct. 28

Soup's on — on Saturday, Oct. 28, 11 a.m. - 4 p.m. at Chapman Cultural Center.

Hub City Empty Bowls will host its annual Soup Day to raise money and awareness for hunger in Spartanburg, where about 16 percent of the people are not sure where their next meal is coming from. Spearheaded by Carolina Clay Artists, Soup Day is a community event where citizens can make $15 donations to receive locally handmade pottery bowls and a simple meal of soup, bread, tea, and the fellowship of others who want to make Spartanburg a better place to live. All money raised will be given to TOTAL Ministries, a local nonprofit charity that helps Spartanburg citizens in dire financial straits. Last year, 2016, Hub City Empty Bowls gave more than $33,000 to TOTAL Ministries. For every bowl taken by a patron, 83 pounds of food can be secured for those in need.

In addition to several hundred pottery bowls to choose from and about two dozen soups donated by local restaurants, patrons will be able to enjoy live music, a silent auction, and a drum circle on an autumn day.

During the summer, Hub City Empty Bowls hosted three public bowl-making events, where the general public was able to make handmade pottery bowls at no cost. All supplies, space, and instruction were donated. These were wholesome, creative, and well attended community events that welcomed everyone, even children who made some of the most endearing bowls. The hand-shaped bowls were left in at the host studios -- West Main Artists Co-Op and Spartanburg Art Museum -- for touch-ups, painting, and firing. In addition, several experienced and professional potters donated bowls, many of which were wheel thrown and of professional quality. All of those bowls will be available on Soup Day. Many people do their Christmas shopping at Soup Day, securing gifts that have significant social and creative meaning.

Empty Bowls is a worldwide charitable and social phenomenon without any oversight or headquarters. It was started in 1990-91 by a high school art teacher who wanted to involve his students in an art-based community project of making pottery bowls that could be used to raise money to feed the poor. From that humble beginning, the concept spread around the world, taking on many different aspects, but always keeping locally made pottery bowls as the source of the fundraising.

Reducing the stress of that college application

From the American Counseling Association

Yes, it's college application season, which means lots of stress for many teens and their parents. But taking the time, early in the application process, to consider and address the many questions and issues related to applying to college can help reduce those stress levels.

One important issue to address early is finances. College is expensive and for most families, this requires discussion and planning. You want to sit down with your student and realistically talk about how a college education will be paid for and what schools are affordable.

If there will be college loans, who will be paying them back? Are scholarships a possibility? Might the student consider a work-study program, or getting an on or off-campus job?

Remember to allow for room and food expenses if the college isn't local. Miscellaneous expenses can include that required math calculator and being able to socialize with friends. How often will there be trips home? Will the student need a new laptop or cell phone? Visiting the websites of colleges under consideration will provide a wealth of information on each school's costs and related expenses.

Stress can also be reduced by doing things early. Don't delay that ACT or SAT testing, especially if a retest might be needed. If you haven't already met with your child's high school guidance counselor, it should happen now. He or she can provide advice on college choices that would be appropriate to your student's grades, abilities and interests.

With answers to these questions, sit down with your student and help narrow down the list of possible schools. Now is the time to be realistic. If grades and test scores, or family finances, indicate almost no chance of an Ivy League school, take that off the list. Most students end up applying to multiple schools, usually 3 to 7, but it's also a good idea to include 1 or 2 "safety" schools where admission is almost certain.

Putting off the completion of college applications, getting the personal references needed, and writing that application essay that's required, will only increase stress and anxiety levels for the family.

Starting as early as possible, asking and answering the important questions, and getting help from your high school counselor will ensure that applying to college will be less stressful. But waiting for that admission office's answer? This remains high anxiety.

Greenville man found guilty in firearms jury trial, sentenced to over 25 years in federal prison

Columbia - United States Attorney Beth Drake announced recently that Carlton Tyrone Nash, age 37, of Greenville, was sentenced to 310 months (25.8 years) in federal prison. In April of this year, a jury returned a guilty verdict, following a two-day jury trial in federal court in Anderson, finding Nash guilty of possession by a firearm and ammunition by a felon. United States District Court Judge Timothy M. Cain, who presided over the trial, sentenced Nash in Anderson.

The government presented multiple witnesses during the course of the trial. Witness testimony and the evidence presented by the government at trial established that in the early morning hours of Tuesday, March 22, 2016, Nash, while wearing a Hillary Clinton mask, forced entry into a residence and fired a shot from the .25 caliber pistol he obtained earlier that day. The shot barely missed one of the residents of the house. Nash then dragged that resident from the home at gunpoint into the street where a fight ensued. While Nash and his initial victim were fighting, the victim's roommate exited the house with a baseball bat, striking Nash in the head with the bat. After a blow to the head from the bat, Nash removed his now bloodied mask revealing his identity to the victims. Nash dropped the gun during the scuffle in the street and left his mask behind as he fled the scene.

After receiving a 911 call from the initial victim, members of the Greenville County Sheriff's Office (GCSO) responded within minutes. A forensic technician from the Greenville County Forensic Division arrived shortly thereafter to process the scene and collect evidence. Experts from the Greenville County Forensics Division were able to match Nash's DNA to the blood in the recovered mask. Based on their investigation, GCSO investigators were able to obtain an arrest warrant for Nash and arrested him just days after the offense. Working in concert with GCSO through the multi-agency initiative "Operation Real Time", Special Agents with the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms, and Explosives (ATF) served a federal arrest warrant on Nash shortly after his state arrest. Nash, after being advised of his Miranda rights, admitted to ATF agents that he had the mask and the gun. Nash has been detained since this incident and remains in custody.

The Nash case was expedited for federal prosecution pursuant to "Operation Real-Time." The goal of this program is to identify individuals for federal prosecution with significant criminal histories who continue to actively possess firearms in the Upstate community. "Real Time" is a working collaboration between local, state, and federal law enforcement as well as state and federal prosecutors. Since August of 2015, the initiative has resulted in the expedited federal prosecution of over 120 defendants and seizure of over 160 firearms as well as assorted ammunition from prohibited persons in the upstate.

"ATF is extremely appreciative of our partners and this collaborative effort to make our communities safer," said Charlotte Field Division's Special Agent in Charge C.J. Hyman. "ATF has committed our resources to help tackle illegal firearms possession and violent crime. That commitment, combined with the cooperation of the Greenville County Sheriff's Office and other local law enforcement agencies, our federal partners, the 13th Circuit Solicitor's Office and the U.S. Attorney's Office, has resulted in a very successful effort with a long-term impact on violent crime in the upstate and beyond."

U.S. Attorney Beth Drake commended the partnership between local, state, and federal agencies that led to the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms and the U.S. Attorney's Office adopting the case. "We work best when we work together. This 'real time' identification of high risk offenders is smart policing and we welcome the opportunity to work alongside our state chiefs, sheriffs, and solicitors in taking violent repeat offenders out of our communities."

The case was investigated by the Greenville County Sheriff's Office, the Greenville County Forensic Division, the South Carolina Law Enforcement Division (SLED), and the ATF. Assistant United States Attorney William J. Watkins and First Assistant United States Attorney A. Lance Crick prosecuted the case.

New vehicle technology creates more distractions behind the wheel

Charlotte, N.C. - With distracted driving as one of the leaders in crash causes, AAA warns that in-vehicle technologies designed to curb the dangerous behavior may not be working as they were intended.

New vehicle infotainment systems take drivers' eyes and attention off the road and hands off the wheel for potentially dangerous periods of time, according to new research from the AAA Foundation for Traffic Safety. Drivers using in-vehicle technologies like voice-based and touch screen features experienced very high levels of visual and mental demand for more than 40 seconds when completing tasks like programming navigation or sending a text message. Removing eyes from the road for just two seconds doubles the risk for a crash, according to previous research. With nearly 40 percent of U.S. drivers using infotainment systems while driving, AAA cautions that using these technologies while behind the wheel can have dangerous consequences.

In North Carolina, there have been 35,152 crashes due to distracted driving in 2017 resulting in 86 fatalities, according to the NCDOT. In South Carolina, there have been 13,872 collisions due to distracted driving in 2017 resulting in 38 fatalities, according to the SCDOT. AAA has conducted this new research to help automakers and system designers improve the functionality of new infotainment systems and the demand they place on drivers.

"What this recent research has shown is that in-vehicle technology may have taken one step forward and two steps back," said Tiffany Wright, president of the AAA Carolinas Foundation for Traffic Safety. "What should seem like simple tasks for drivers can become difficult to complete and create unsafe conditions when their eyes are being taken off the road for long periods of time."

The AAA Foundation for Traffic Safety commissioned researchers from the University of Utah to examine the visual (eyes off road) and cognitive (mental) demand as well as the time it took drivers to complete a task using the infotainment systems in 30 new 2017 vehicles. Study participants were required to use voice command, touch screen and other interactive technologies to make a call, send a text message, tune the radio or program navigation, all while driving down the road.

Programming navigation was the most distracting task, taking an average of 40 seconds for drivers to complete. When driving at 25 mph, a driver can travel the length of four football fields during the time it could take to enter a destination in navigation—all while distracted from the important task of driving. Programming navigation while driving was available in 12 of the 30 vehicle systems tested.

None of the 30 vehicle infotainment systems produced low demand, while 23 systems generated high or very high levels of demand on drivers:

12 systems generated very high demand

11 systems generated high demand

7 systems generated moderate demand

Frustration resulting from unsatisfactory use of these systems increases cognitive demand and increases the potential for distracted driving.

According to a new AAA public opinion survey, nearly 70 percent of U.S. adults say that they want the new technology in their vehicle, but only 24 percent feel that the technology already works perfectly.

"Just because a certain in-vehicle technology is available while driving, does not mean it's necessarily safe to operate behind the wheel," added

Wright. "Some of these practices should only be performed during emergencies."

Researchers developed an advanced rating scale to measure the visual (eyes off road) and cognitive (mental) demands and the time it took to complete a task experienced by drivers using each vehicle's infotainment system. The scale ranged from low to very high levels of demand. A low level of demand equates to listening to the radio or an audiobook, while very high demand is equivalent to trying to balance a checkbook while driving. AAA believes a safe in-vehicle technology system should not exceed a low level of demand.

Researchers found that most infotainment systems tested could easily be made safer by simply following clearly stated federal recommendations such as locking out text messaging, social media and programming navigation while the car is in motion. In 2012, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) released a set of voluntary safety guidelines advising automakers to block access to tasks when vehicles are not parked.

A total of 120 drivers ages 21-36 participated in the study of 30 new 2017 model-year vehicles. The latest report is the fifth phase of distraction research from AAA's Center for Driving Safety and Technology. The Center was created in 2013 with the goal of studying the safety implications for how drivers interact with new vehicle technologies when behind the wheel.
