BMW Group builds closed-loop recycling system

With a closed material cycle for production equipment made from hard metal, the BMW Group saves around seven tonnes of tungsten per year.

By recycling used drilling and milling inserts from production equipment, the BMW Group reduces its annual consumption of the conflict resource tungsten by seven tonnes. This new and sustainable material cycle is being implemented with immediate effect in all German and Austrian BMW plants.

In this way, energy consumption is reduced by 70% and CO2 emissions are cut by 60% compared to primary tungsten. The BMW Group is committed to preserving and wherever possible – reusing valuable resources.

Piedmont Natural Gas purchases compressed natural gas fueling station in Greer

Charlotte, N.C. - Piedmont Natural Gas recently announced its purchase of a compressed natural gas (CNG) fueling station in Greer from St. Louis-based Spire CNG Inc. The facility is Piedmont's 12th CNG fueling station in the company's three-state service territory and its fourth in South Carolina.

Located at exit 60 off Interstate 85, near S.C. Highway 101, the station provides a convenient fueling stop for trucks, fleet vehicles and other vehicles that run on CNG. The station features six fast-fill fuel pumps, can accommodate Class 8 tractor-trailer trucks and is accessible 24/7.

Thanks to the domestic abundance of natural gas, the price of CNG remains below that of conventional vehicle fuels. With savings over conventional fuels such as gasoline and diesel, business fleets and the trucking industry have found CNG to be a cost-effective fueling solution.

Marks selected by Detroit Tigers in eighth round of 2021 MLB Draft

Denver, Colo. - USC Upstate right-handed pitcher Jordan Marks was selected 225th overall in the 8th round of the 2021 Major League Baseball First-Year Player Draft by the Detroit Tigers on Monday afternoon.

The Bright's Grove, Ontario native and Friday night ace is the 19th draft pick in program history and the first since Blake Whitney, who was selected by the Chicago Cubs in 2018. Marks is the second-highest draft pick for the Spartans behind Chad Sobotka who was taken in the 4th round, 133rd overall, by the Atlanta Braves in 2014.

Marks is the 11th draft pick under Mike McGuire as a head coach, and the first for Coach McGuire since he and his staff took over the Spartan program ahead of the 2020

OneSpartanburg, Inc. Certified Training Series

In 2021, the proper training is an integral part of attracting, developing, retaining and engaging with talent. OneSpartanburg, Inc. and The Employers Network are excited to partner to offer a monthly series of timely and impactful training sessions designed to help businesses of all sizes, and in all industries, prepare for future success.

Programs include:

1. Selling Without Being 'Salesy':

August 25, 2021

8:30 a.m. - 4:30 p.m.

This two-day course is designed to make participants comfortable with sales skills and best practices.

2. Emergency Preparedness

September 17, 2021

8:30 a.m. - 12:30 p.m.

Learn the tips your business needs to be ready for potential active shooter and other emergency situations.

3. From Buddy to Leader

October 7, 2021

8:30 a.m. - 4:30 p.m.

Grow and better navigate the responsibilities of being a leader. Explore how to set boundaries, goals and expectations, provide feedback and motivate others.

4. Develop an Inclusive Culture

November 4, 2021

8:30 a.m. - 4:30 p.m.

This training will help you build a kinder, more respectful workplace by tackling four subjects: overcoming biases, embracing diversity and inclusion, preventing workplace harassment and standing up to bullying. 5. HR 101

December 2, 2021

8:30 a.m. - 4:30 p.m.

If your business is without a dedicated human resource representative, or if you're a small business with an HR rep who wears multiple hats, this course is for you. This training will cover all of the HR needs for small business-

OneSpartanburg, Inc. named 2021 U.S. Chamber of the Year

OneSpartanburg, Inc. was named Chamber of the Year by the Association of Chamber of Commerce Executives (ACCE) recently.

ACCE is a national association of more than 1,600 chambers of commerce and related business and economic development organizations, representing more than 9,000 professionals in the industry.

Chamber of the Year, sponsored by Member-Clicks, a Personify Company, is the most prestigious and competitive award presented by ACCE and is the only globallyrecognized industry award that honors top chambers of commerce. Those honored with the Chamber of the Year designation have demonstrated organizational strength and made an impact on key community priorities.

"Through the challenges of the past year, the value and relevance of chambers of commerce have never been more apparent," said ACCE President & CEO Sheree Anne Kelly. "This achievement reflects how hard chambers work to ensure their impact and success well beyond these difficult times. Congratulations on OneSpartanburg, Inc.'s remarkable leadership, commitment to its community and dedication to the chamber profes-

OneSpartanburg, Inc.'s application featured its holistic approach to business, economic tourism development, and its Bringing Back the Burg business recovery efforts in response to COVID-19.

"National validation of our organization's work is affirming. It is a testament to the leadership of our Executive Board, the talents of our professional team and the unwavering support of our partners," said OneSpartanburg, Inc. President & CEO Allen Smith. "Chamber and economic development professionals across the country, through this recent honor, agree there's something special happening in Spartanburg. We dedicate this recognition to the community and are more committed than ever to driving Spartanburg's prolonged prosperity." Chambers of commerce interested in competing for the award first must qualify by participating in a vigorous multi-stage Organizations process. must meet minimum thresholds in at least three of five key performance areas on the ACCE Annual Operations Survey, including net revenue and assets, membership account retention, and membership dollar retention. "The collaborative nature of our community is one of the many reasons why Spartanburg is the recipient of such a distinguished award. On behalf of the Executive Board, I want to convey our sincerest thanks to our partners. Our organization has no formal authority, and everything we do and accomplish is through partnership with others," said Phil Feisal, President of Spartanburg Medical Center and Chair of the OneSpartanburg, Inc. Executive Board. "This recognition belongs to our greater team and the Spartanburg community at large. The collaborative work and future wins have just begun."

Qualifying chambers enter the competition with a written application addressing all aspects of organizational operation and programmatic work. Applications are scored by peer chamber executives to determine finalists. Winners are selected from among finalists based on an interview before a panel of experienced chamber professionals.

To ensure the fairest competition, applicants are grouped into four categories based on: annual revenue, membership, area population and other fac-

Spartanburg Philharmonic announces Music Director search

The Spartanburg Philharmonic recently announced its search for the organization's 10th Music Director. In making the announcement, President of the Board Chip McLeod stated, "As an almost century-old organization located in one of the fastest-growing cities in the United States, the position of Music Director is one that holds special significance. We are seeking a talented conductor who has strong leadership and communication skills, is passionate about and has experience with music education and community engagement in addition to musical talent; in short, a 21st-century conductor for a modern orchestra with a deep history."

The position will begin with the 2023-24 season. Assisted by industry expert Henry Fogel, the Search Committee will begin applications reviewing August 31, 2021. (Electronic applications only.) The deadline for applicants is August 30, 2021 by 4:00 PM EST.

Located in the upstate of South Carolina, Spartanburg Philharmonic's home is its namesake, Spartanburg, a city of 37,000 with a countywide population of 320,000. With a $700,000+ annual budget, Spartanburg Philharmonic has two homes -the historic 1,489-seat Twichell Auditorium in Zimmerli Performance Center located on the Converse University campus, and the Chapman

Cultural Center's 476-seat Theater, the premier arts venue in the Greater Spartanburg area. orchestra presents Masterworks concerts in its long-standing and popular Zimmerli (classical) series, four-chamber concerts in its Espresso series, and a variety of renowned guest artists in its Bluegrass series each season. An arts organization whose mission is to enrich, inspire, and educate through live performances of highquality music, Spartanburg Philharmonic partners with a variety of community, health, and education organizations to provide opportunities for all ages and abilities to enjoy.

Civil War picture frame

By 1861, when the Civil War started, there were already several ways to take a picture. The first photos of a war were taken during the Mexican-American fight from 1846 to 1848. The Civil War (1861-1865) was the fourth. Matthew Brady was a determined photographer who collected his and other photographers' war photos by buying negatives from others. Most of the pictures in museums today are part of the record saved by Brady, but not all were taken by him.

There are ambrotypes, daguerreotypes, albumen prints and a surprising number of stereo pictures of the war. Many were portraits of soldiers in uniform posing in a studio, but there are also many pictures of battlefields after a fight showing the dead. The portraits were framed and displayed just as we do today.

An unusual painted iron picture frame was offered in an Eldred auction with an estimated price of $500 to $1,000. It held two pictures, and the small glass circle at the top of the frame beneath an eagle was meant for a picture of President Lincoln. The large circle surrounded by American flags and a Union shield held the portrait of a soldier. The frame was marked as "design patented Nov. 25, 1862" and was probably made for years after that.

Deep Orange 12: Autonomy at 180 mph

Bundled in bulky jackets and scarves, a small group of Clemson students braced against the wind on a blustery Indiana day in March while walking on one of the world's most famous race tracks.

Two months later, 135,000 fans would flood the same spot to watch the world's best drivers hurtle past at 200 miles per hour. Today, however, the famous Indianapolis Motor Speedway was eerily quiet. The only sound came from the 20 students and faculty in the middle of the track, all working on a lone SUV armored in sensors, cameras and complicated computer systems.

"It was bit surreal we were even there," said Unmesh Patil, a powertrain controls engineer on Clemson's Deep Orange 12 student team. "A lot of us chose automotive engineering because we wanted to work in motorsports. This is the dream."

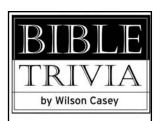

These students were doing something very few people would ever have the chance to do: Testing their designs at the largest sports venue in the world. The day's testing was just one more step towards their goal: engineering and validating a first-ofits-kind high-speed autonomous race car.

The 40-student team unveiled their finished selfdriving racecar in Indianapolis this past May, wrapping up a whirlwind 18month design cycle resulting in one of the most advanced self-driving projects ever attempted. Later this year, the Clemson car will be duplicated around a dozen times for use in a head-tohead autonomous race making it one of the first university-designed vehicles to go into series production.

The Grand Challenge

In 2018, a small group of industry leaders, educators and economic developers gathered in Indianapolis to discuss a crazy idea: Putting on the first-ever head-tohead autonomous vehicle race, and run by students to boot.

"They outlined a vision, and we knew Deep Orange was the missing piece," said Robert Prucka, Deep Orange 12 faculty lead and Kulwicki Endowed Professor in Motorsports Engineering and associate professor with the Clemson University Department of Automotive Engineering. "Here at Clemson, our expertise is engineering prototype cars with students. It was a natural fit for us to take this on."

Every year, a team of Clemson automotive engineering students is tasked with designing a prototype vehicle to answer a grand challenge. Known as Deep Orange, the long-running program has brought in major OEMs and global suppliers to guide students through the harrowing vehicle design process. This year, however, it was different: Not only did students have to design cutting-edge autonomous systems, but their prototype had to operate at high speeds, follow complicated race control procedures and fit into a tightly-constrained, aerodynamic package.

From traditional OEMs and technology giants to well-funded startups, selfdriving technology is transforming the mobility in the race for safety improvements and untapped business opportunities. Companies are pouring billions into R&D efforts, hiring armies of specialized engineers and logging millions of road miles. Challenges abound for applying autonomy to street vehicles, from handling unpredictable road hazards to cybersecurity and legal hurdles.

Autonomy in head-tohead racing goes one step further, pushing the limits of available technology to achieve sufficient speed, synchronicity, reliability and redundancy.

At 180 mph, Clemson's racecar covers the length of a football field in 1.2 seconds. The sensor suite including cameras, radars, long-distance LiDARs and high-precision GPS sensors - collects data so fast it can fill up a 1TB hard drive in 20 minutes. For scale, the Hubble Space Telescope generates 10TB per year, according to NASA. This puts a tremendous burden on the perception and computing systems to quickly, reliably and synchronously control the car at speeds much higher than typical consumer vehicles.

On top of those challenges, Clemson was tasked with making sure the vehicle could be produced multiple times in a cost effective and timely manner. This is far beyond previous projects, said Prucka. "It's an incredibly ambitious challenge, not just in the technology itself but with the short timeline, series production, disparate systems, and of course, staying safe during COVID," said Prucka. "We ended up far exceeding our scope just due to the unprecedented nature of the project, of the grand challenge. We simply couldn't know everything that would be required from the start."

The Journey

So how do you engineer a first-ever autonomous racecar? The first challenge is building the team, says Janam Sanghavi, Deep Orange 12 Program Manager ('21). Previous Deep Orange projects divided students into traditional subsystems, but that same structure didn't make sense for the Deep Orange 12 scope. One team strategy came down to making a plan for each of the primary controls they needed to design: steering, braking, gear shifting and throttle.

"We thought of making cross-functional teams around those problems, where people from each subsystem team came together to focus only on that control," said Sanghavi. "I'm very proud of that, especially since it worked."

The next challenge was determining the design envelope based on customer requirements. Similar to the OEM design process for consumer-focused vehicles, previous Deep Orange teams built out 3-4 personas to guide their designs. For Deep Orange 12, the customer was harder to define. In one sense, it was the competition teams developing autonomous algorithms ahead of a head-to-head race in October. In another, it was the partners responsible for reproducing the racecar, dictating that it be easily and cost effectively manufactured. In yet another, it was Clemson University aiming to provide unparalleled educational experiences and develop high-impact automotive engineering leaders.

Deep Orange 12 collaborated with more than 38 suppliers, partners and organizations over the project's 12month timeline, often cocreating brand new engineering solutions, components, software and capabilities tailored to the Clemson project. Such collaboration is critical to innovation, not only to find the best solutions but to ensure timely and cost-effective manufacturability. An inexpensive part that took six months to arrive, or a component requiring frequent or costly maintenance, were no-go solutions. Their choices determined the final bill of materials, production schedule and supply chain plan, all of which passed to the partners responsible for series production.

From there, it was all hands on deck to get things to work, said Akshay Palakkal, a controls integration engineer on the project.

"Because of COVID, a lot of our roles got shuffled around. You did what needed to be done regardless of your title. Even though I'm on the powertrain team, we made wiring harnesses, designed 3D models, anything that needed to be done because our deadlines were so aggressive," he said. "One major challenge was working remotely. My old manager used to say, 'You can't build a car behind a computer.' I never used to believe that, but now I see how it slows down everything. A 10-minute in-person brainstorming session is more valuable than five Zoom meetings."

In March, students headed to Indianapolis to collect data using a surrogate vehicle, one outfitted with identical cameras, radars, longdistance LiDARs and highprecision GPS sensors as the final design. The project's final milestones followed soon after, starting with the first engine fire and proofof-concept of the autonomous systems and finally, a fully autonomous lap on the track.

"We're excited, exhausted, worried, stressed out. Over the last year and a half, our subsystem teams have gone days in the lab trying to meet deadlines, to get the car ready, to get systems to work," said Shristy Sagar, Deep Orange 12 Vehicle Structures Lead. "It's incredible to see our first car drive by, to be followed by many more, and know we designed them. It's probably the proudest moment of our lives."

Engineering The Leaders of the Future

A crucial component of Deep Orange is how students work closely with industry leaders, developing the soft skills and project management prowess to launch their careers. As students attempt one of the most challenging programs of its kind, mentors guide them to avoid common pitfalls, develop interpersonal skills and ingrain best practices to help them after graduation.

A month after graduation, more than 95% of the Deep Orange 12 team have found roles in industry, some with traditional OEMs and others at high-profile mobility startups and technology companies.

"We say it all the time, but the ideal outcome of Deep Orange is highly capable students," said Chris Paredis. "This was an incredibly challenging project, but if our experience tells us anything, it's that these learning experiences have a tremendous impact on their success after they leave Clemson."

The student team presented their final design in May, sharing it with their colleagues, their mentors and most importantly, their parents.

"This experience is so unique. Most autonomous projects in motorsports are confined to 1/10th scale cars, or working on specific subsystems. Most of us don't get to work on something like this, something that has never been done," said Unmesh Patil, a powertrain controls engineer on the project. "Without parental support, I think this project would be impossible to do. We got to share it with our families, I shared it with my mother during our final presentation. We don't usually get to discuss these things in that much detail, and I was very excited to share that with her."

"It's been a huge learning curve, a lot of changes and how we've adapted and made things possible, it's quite a feat that the entire team has pulled together. Autonomy is in the budding stages, and as students we are learning and applying things, so there's s a lot of experimentation where we continuously try things and find ways to do it. That's where engineering shines," said Manikanda Balaji Venkatesan, Deep Orange 12 Autonomy Lead. "I'm elated. The fact that we were able to pull this off, and exceed what we wanted to do, is just amazing."

What to know when shopping in stores this back-to-school season

(StatePoint) Is your family returning to brick-andmortar stores to prepare for the return of brick-andmortar school? A new survey offers insights into what you can expect and how you can prepare for the experience.

The survey, conducted in June by Sensormatic Solutions, finds consumer confidence reaching new highs, with 73% of backto-school shoppers saying they were neutral or unconcerned about shopping in-store currently. This is a major leap from previous pandemic-era surveys. In spring 2021, only 50% of shoppers were neutral or unconcerned about shopping in-stores, and only 35% of shoppers felt that way in winter 2020.

"The survey highlights a likely return to many prepandemic back-to-school shopping habits," says Kim Melvin, global leader of marketing, Sensormatic Solutions, a leading retail solutions provider. "Families now have an increased confidence about shopping in stores and they are going to be shopping earlier and spending more on apparel and school supplies."

As part of its mission to solve complex retail challenges related to consumer confidence, health and safety, Sensormatic Solutions is providing its top three strategies to improve your back-to-school shopping experience.

1. During the pandemic, retailers large and small implemented and perfected an array of shopping options in an effort to keep customers and staff healthy and safe. The good news? These options are not going away. While instore shopping is the most popular way people plan to stock up on school essentials this year, according to survey results, options like buy online, pickup in stores (BOPIS), curbside pickup and online shopping allow you to leisurely comparison shop from the comfort of home. And, thanks to innovations in inventory tracking software, these options have become a highly reliable way to get what you need when you want it.

2. With the high demand in apparel and school supplies - 70% and 53%, respectively, say they plan to spend the most on those categories this year - it may be a good idea to get a head start on preparing your children for in-person learning. Consider going to stores earlier than you may have in the past to beat the rush and get the products you and your children need.

3. Find out whether your state offers a tax-free shopping period. Timing your shopping to occur during this period can help you save substantially at checkout, especially if you're among the 12% of consumers planning to spend more this year compared to last.

For more back-to-school shopping insights and tips, visit sensormatic.com.

"Overall, you can expect this shopping season to look more like 2019 than 2020, a welcome change for both consumers and retailers," says Melvin.

MUSC Hollings Cancer Center awarded grant following action against "cancer funds" charities

Charleston - South Carolina Secretary of State Mark Hammond announced the award of a $39,024 grant to MUSC Hollings Cancer Center following a landmark enforcement action against four sham charities and their directors.

"It is so rare that funds are recovered from these bad actors and then distributed to the actual cause that the donors intended to support," said Secretary Hammond. "I am happy that South Carolina residents are seeing a direct benefit from this enforcement action through such a worthy organization as MUSC Hollings Cancer Center."

Hollings Cancer Center Director Raymond N. DuBois, M.D., Ph.D., thanked Hammond for awarding Hollings the grant. "While it's unfortunate that the donations were collected under false pretenses, it's wonderful that they will finally be used for those donors' original reasons to give, which is to help cancer patients."

The grant will help support hundreds of breast and pediatric cancer patients at Hollings, said Debbie Bordeau, Hollings' Director of Development. "The grant will help provide financial assistance for housing, travel, meals, medication and other necessities. Funds from the grant will also support our survivorship programs, which give cancer survivors the education and tools they need to improve both their mental and physical health after battling this fearsome dis-

In this unprecedented effort, the South Carolina Secretary of State's Office joined the other 49 states, the District of Columbia and the Federal Trade Commission in May 2015 to permanently shut down Cancer Fund of America, Inc., The Breast Cancer Society, Inc., Cancer Support Services, Inc., and

the Children's Cancer Fund of America, Inc.

The "Cancer Fund" charities, which were operated by Jim Reynolds, along with his friends and family members, bilked donors of more than $187 million between 2008 and 2012. The multistate complaint filed in May 2015 included counts of systematic misrepresentations to the public about the organizations' charitable programs, manipulation of the value assigned to donated items on their tax forms to make the organizations appear larger and more efficient than they were, and the Reynolds family's personal use of donated funds.

For example, Reynolds family used donations to pay themselves exorbitant salaries and hold board meetings on cruises and at vacation destinations such as Disney World. Of the $187 million raised by the defendants, only 3 percent was directed to cancer patients in the United States in the form of "care packages" containing religious DVDs, Moon Pies, random items of clothing, and various sundries that lacked any palliative or supportive uses Americans suffering from

Following the filing of the multistate enforcement action in 2015, the organizations' assets were liquidated. Final court orders were issued in March 2019 by Arizona U.S. District Court Judge Neil V. Wake approving the charity regulators' recommendation that the recovered funds be distributed to Rockefeller Philanthropy Advisors, to award grants for the provision of care and services to cancer patients in all 50 states. The goal of this distribution is to ensure that the recovered funds go to provide direct assistance to cancer patients, as intended by the original donors to the Cancer Fund chari-

Since that time, approximately $2.5 million has been distributed through the Rockefeller Foundation to National Cancer Institute Cancer Care Centers throughout the country, including the $39,024 grant to MUSC Hollings Cancer Center, the state's only National Cancer Institute-designated cancer center.

Hammond said he hopes this landmark case serves as an example that scammers will not be tolerated in South Carolina.

"Not only is the Cancer Fund multistate an historic case in the area of charities regulation, but it stands as a warning to those who exploit people seeking to help others through charitable donations," said Secretary Hammond. "I encourage anyone who has any concerns about a charity, professional fundraiser, or nonprofit raffle to contact the Division of Public Charities at charities@sos.sc.gov or 1-888-CHARITI (242-7484).You can also use the Charitable Online Solicitation Complaint Form at www.sos.sc.gov to file a confidential complaint 24 hours a day, 7 days a week."

VA Grants to Help Homeless Veterans

Homeless Veterans

More than 260 non-profit community programs across the country received portions of $418 million in grants for the Support Services for Veteran Families program. Last year alone the Department of Veterans and their 19,919 children in the program.

The SSVF program runs in all 50 states, as well as Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, District of Columbia and Guam. Its main focus is homelessness and getting veterans and their families into permanent housing. The SSVF partners with community programs with all manner of help: case management, VA benefits, health care, child care, daily living services, legal assistance, transportation, financial planning, counseling and much more. In some cases, there are time-limited payments to landlords, utilities and moving companies if that helps a veteran and family to stay in or get to permanent housing.
