Wounded Warrior Project honors Chesnee Middle School students' efforts

During the week of Veteran's Day, Chesnee Middle School students and staff collected donations for the Wounded Warrior Project. Students brought in change and donations from home and each day faculty were present in the car line to collect donations as well. On the final day of the donation drive, students were able to purchase items from the school snack cart. A total of $2000 was raised as a result of these efforts!

Because of this incredible gesture from the CMS Family, Cindy Parson with the Wounded Warrior Project visited the campus to speak with students about her own Wounded Warrior story and how their donation will help injured Veterans. She also presented the school with a special flag to honor their efforts.

Louise Franke, a Clemson senior from Spartanburg, made University history recentlywhen she became the first Clemson student named a Rhodes Scholar.

Franke, an Honors College student majoring in biochemistry with minors in political science and philosophy, is one of 32 American Rhodes Scholars selected through an intensive application and interview process.

"The Rhodes community is an intellectual community where people care about ideas, about action and about the world," said Franke. "It's a group of people that fight the world's fight, and the fact that I'm now part of that blows my mind. It's a dream come true."

The Rhodes Scholarship provides for study at the University of Oxford and is recognized worldwide as the top undergraduate award for college students.

"Congratulations to Louise on this incredible achievement. I am very proud of her, not only for this prestigious honor, but also because of her desire to use her education to make a difference in the world," said Clemson University President Jim Clements. "The Rhodes Scholarship will provide her with an amazing opportunity, and I am grateful to our faculty and staff who have taught and supported her along the way. I cannot wait to see what the future holds for her."

Clemson has had six Rhodes finalists since 2006, including two this year, but Franke is the first to be named a Rhodes Scholar.

"Louise's success speaks volumes about the high quality of our students and their work ethics, as well as the dedication of our faculty to our students," said Robert Jones, executive vice president for academic affairs and provost. "In my 45 years of higher education experience, this stands out as one of the highest pinnacles of excellence."

Franke plans to pursue a B.A. in philosophy, politics and economics at Oxford before earning a joint M.D. and Ph.D. in bioethics. Her goal is to practice as a physician while forging a career as a bioethicist in the public policy and academic realms.

"What a spectacular day for Clemson! Thomas Green Clemson excelled in science and loved the classics — he pursued postgraduate education at some of the oldest institutions in Europe. How perfect is it that Louise Franke, who also excels in science and is inspired by ethics, will pursue her dream at Oxford University," said College of Science Dean Cynthia Y. Young. "We all look forward to seeing the impact she will have on our world and especially on her home state of South Carolina."

Bringing philosophy into the laboratory

When Franke started her first year as a Clemson undergraduate student, she explored every option in her path.

She wanted to pursue a career in medicine, but also loved studying the humanities. Ultimately, she chose

"I've been lucky to study both biochemistry and the humanities during my Clemson career, but until this year, I never imagined that there was a way for me to apply both of them to my career," said Franke. "Studying at Oxford gives me an opportunity to combine the practical with the theoretical, so I could focus on both of my passions while also doing something for the world."

Her work as a researcher in the Ingram-Smith lab in the Eukaryotic Pathogens Innovation Center (EPIC) the energy metabolism of the pathogenic protist Entamoeba histolytica.

She also serves as the College of Science representative to the Clemson Student Ethics Commission, where she helps foster ethics education on campus.

Alison Starr-Moss, a senior lecturer and director of advising in the College of Science's Department of Genetics and Biochemistry, says that Franke has consistently demonstrated an aptitude for connecting content across disciplines.

"Louise is gifted not only with academic ability but also passion for interdisciplinary study. Her degree and co-curricular activities have fostered a unique vision for the intersection of medicine, bioethics and policy, and Louise has already impacted our campus community," said Starr-Moss. "The award of the Rhodes Scholarship will give Louise a voice on an international stage and provide a step to the advancement of science, bioethics and human health. I could not be prouder." Franke explores public policy in detail as a Dixon Global Policy Scholar, a select program for students interested in enhancing their knowledge of issues that shape the world. The program brings students from different majors together to discuss broader policy issues, something Franke said broadened her understanding of different impacts.

"You'll have someone from bioengineering and someone from computer science or environmental studies or political science all contributing to how different issues apply to their fields," said Franke. "Those discussions are some of my favorite Clemson experiences so far because they helped me see the importance of interdisciplinary work and how it can positively impact public policy development."

The Lyceum Scholars program, which offers a required political philosophy class each semester, also allowed Franke to apply a philosophical lens to her studies in and out of the lab. She was part of a group of only 10 scholars across campus selected to participate, which also involves biweekly Socratic sessions with a professor of political philosophy.

William Lasser, executive director of the Honors College, said these programs were developed specifically for students like Franke who have the potential to compete for major scholarships, such as the Rhodes.

"Louise is the epitome of a Clemson Honors student. She has an intense intellectual curiosity, an extraordinary range of interests and a passion for really making a difference," said Lasser. "She has taken full advantage of every opportunity available to her as a Clemson Honors student, and I have no doubt that she will continue to excel at Oxford University and beyond."

In addition to being a finalist for the Rhodes Scholarship, Franke was named a Political Studies Fellow at the Hudson Institute in 2019, where she participated in rigorous study of politics and political philosophy.

She is actively engaged in the campus community at Clemson, serving as president pro-tempore on Clemson's Undergraduate Student Senate, a position that is second in rank in the senate body. She also leads the senate's driving committee, which works to cultivate a positive atmosphere between senators, the student body and University administration.

"I am forever grateful to Clemson University, the Clemson Honors College, the Lyceum Program, Clemson Undergraduate Student Government, the Office of Major Fellowships, and the genetics and biochemistry, political science and philosophy departments for providing so many incredible opportunities, mentors, the greatest of friends and the most wonderful four years I could ever have imagined," said Franke. "This also wouldn't have been possible without my friends and family, who always believed in me."

The Rhodes Scholarship

The Rhodes Scholarship is the oldest and most prestigious scholarship available to American College students. The award provides financial support for students as they complete postgraduate degrees at the University of Oxford.

Rhodes Scholars are chosen based on academic excellence; the energy to use their talents to the fullest; attributes such as truth, courage, kindness and devotion to duty; and moral force of character and the instinct to lead.

A live dog by that name became famous in the movies years later. Bonzo was first pictured in a British comic strip in 1922, but the bank was made in Germany by Saalheimer & Strauss. The company made toys, especially cars and motorcycles, until it was bought in 1936. The toys had an oval mark with two overlapping S letters on top of the word Success. There are two similar versions of the bank; a poem explaining how to deposit money is on the front of one type but not on the other.

Q: Is an embossed metal Cracker Jack button stud worth anything? It has Sailor Jack, little dog Bingo and "Me for Crackerjack" on the front. It's about 1-inch high and 3/4-inch wide.

A: Frederick Rueckheim began selling popcorn in 1871. He and his brother, Louis, sold a mixture of popcorn, peanuts and molasses at the Chicago World's Fair in 1893. Louis copyrighted the recipe and the slogan, "The more you eat, the more you want," in 1896. Coupons for prizes were added to the boxes in 1910. Sales increased dramatically after small prizes for children were included in the boxes beginning in 1912. Frederick's grandson was the model for Sailor Jack, which was first used in advertisements in 1916. The first boxes with Sailor Jack were produced in 1918. Cracker Jack prizes are collectible, especially the old metal ones. Prizes were eliminated in 2016 and replaced by a game that can be played by scanning a URL code. A button stud like yours sold recently for $56. Cracker Jack is now part of Frito Lay.

US Tour BMW Junior Team, Max Hesse (GER), Dan Harper (GBR), Neil Verhagen (USA) with mentor Jochen Neerpasch at the BMW Group plant Spartanburg.

Hesse, "Plus, it was nice to be involved in the farewell race for the BMW M8 GTE and sample the atmosphere at Road Atlanta."

This was followed by a trip to the largest BMW Group plant in the world, in Spartanburg, where the BMW Junior Team gained first-hand insights into the production of BMW X models. "As we are representing BMW as drivers, it was cool for us to see how production works in the largest plant in the world in Spartanburg," Verhagen. "It is huge, and we only saw a small part of it. Hopefully, we will return sometime and check out some other areas. It was really fascinating."

Harper, Hesse Verhagen, together with their mentor Jochen Neerpasch, who accompanied the BMW Junior Team throughout the entire trip, then visited the BMW Car of America Foundation, which possesses a fascinating exhibition of vintage BMW vehicles and other BMW collectibles. A special wall drawing was dedicated to the motorsport history of Jochen Neerpasch. The group saw out the evening with a barbecue with Verhagen's family, who live in Mooresville (USA) near Spartanburg.

For Neerpasch and the Juniors, the trip to the USA marked the end of two years together. "So far, the guvs have exceeded the expectations we had of them at the start, which were pretty high anyway," said Neerpasch. "All that they are missing is experience. They are already setting lap times like those of the top drivers. They need more race outings, and they are sure to get them next

Harper was also positive in his appraisal of his time as a BMW Junior so far: "We have come a long way since the first NLS race almost two years ago. It is incredible how much we have learned in that time both as racing drivers and as people. Our training is hard, but it is paying dividends. I think our results in the BMW M6 GT3 this season have proved that."

BMW M4 GT3 test outing under race conditions at Sebring. Last weekend was all about the BMW M4 GT3 not only for the BMW Junior Team, but also for BMW M Motorsport. The 24 Hours of Sebring was the final endurance test for the car, before it goes in search of victories and titles from January 2022. When it does so, it will be in the hands of private BMW M Motorsport teams, some of which are based in North America. For this reason, BMW M Motorsport took the opportunity at Sebring to hand over the BMW M4 GT3

Team RMG, to the US teams, who will run the car in the coming season. Engineers and mechanics from BMW Teams RMG and RLL worked together for the outing at Sebring. The Turner Motorsport and BimmerWorld Racing teams were also involved with drivers Bill Auberlen, Robby Foley and James Clay and gained valuable experience with the new

Harper was only involved in the tests, as he is classed as a Gold driver, of which only one may be registered per team. The Gold driver for this race was Auberlen. "The circuit is different to the ones we are familiar with in Europe," said Hesse, summing up the test under race conditions. "Unfortunately, there were two incidents in the race, which resulted in long repairs. Apart from that, the BMW M4 GT3 did very well. Racing here was a valuable experience."

The American drivers drew a very positive conclusion. "The first impression of the BMW M4 GT3 is that it looks fantastic," said Auberlen. "Then I drove it, and I can say that it is far better in every area than the BMW M6 GT3. With a 24-hour race in Sebring, we put the BMW M4 GT3 to the toughest test imaginable."

Foley said: "A fantastic car. You can immediately feel the two years of development that have been invested in the BMW M4 GT3. The systems in the interior, with which the driver works, are a big step forward compared to the BMW M6 GT3. The car is very user-friendly."

This was backed up by Clay, who was driving a GT3 race car for the first time in Sebring: "Given that the BMW M4 GT3 is far faster than the GT4 cars I have driven previously, I found it very easy to adapt to the car, as the car is very well thought out and easy to operate. I was able to focus fully on the driving."

The BMW M4 GT3 will contest its first race in the hands of BMW Motorsport teams January 2022, at the 24 Hours of Dubai (UAE). This will be followed by the 24 Hours of Daytona (USA) at the end of the month. The detailed race programme for the BMW Junior Team will be announced at a later date.
