Canton china

Canton china with its blue and white decoration has been a popular collectible for many years, but few can distinguish it from the other early or modem Chinese blue and white china. It has been popular for centuries partly because cobalt blue coloring was safe to use when decorating dishes. Red ware and pewter contained dangerous lead.

By 1710, the Chinese made at least four patterns of Chinese export porcelain that included landscape designs. Two of the most popular were Nanking (1770-1820) and Canton (1785-1853). Nanking was decorated with a willow tree, boat, teahouse, birds and a fence. Canton had symbolic decorations including a border band of blue and white scallops representing rain and clouds, a bridge, water, rocks, a pagoda, scholar, waterwheel, riverboats or sampans, two kinds of orchid leaves, and a willow tree. Each symbol had a meaning reflecting endurance, harmony in nature, movement, the old leading the young, or life.

There are other unnamed blue and white patterns from the same period and even a similar English willow pattern. Later Canton pieces are thicker, heavier and have less detailed decorations. There are 92 known shapes of Canton including chamber pots, slop pots, plain pitchers, cider jugs, oyster bowls, patty pan bowls (used to bake crust), helmet pitchers, butter dishes, butter pats (five shapes) and hot water plates. Sometimes a color is added over the blue designs. This adds color to the piece but often covers the original blue decorations.

Recently, leadership of Spartanburg Community College and Converse University signed agreements to develop a block transfer program that offers SCC graduates who successfully complete an Associate of Arts or Associate of Science degree the opportunity to enroll in Converse University toward the completion of a bachelor's degree.

Q: My mother gave a little dish to my father as a hint to stop smoking. When and why was it made, and is it valuable?

A: Your dish is probably part of a set of small ashtrays used at elegant tablecloth dinner parties in the 1900s. Since almost everyone over 18 smoked cigarettes, it was customary to put a small dish or urn at each table that held a few cigarettes and, of course, an ashtray. Between courses and after dinner, it was OK to light a cigarette or even a cigar. The dish was made by Copelan Spode, perhaps as early as 1900 but very popular after 1915. The 6-by-9-inch dish was listed recently at $70 to $90 online, and one sold at a show for $58.

Clemson University and Prisma Health celebrate the expansion of their research and clinical collaborations with the opening of new space to accommodate the expanding community research and clinical programs of the Clemson University Institute for Engaged Aging. The institute now occupies the top floor of the Prisma Health Oconee Memorial Hospital in Seneca, South Carolina.

Leadership from both organizations, researchers, faculty and staff launched the institute in its new comprehensive center specializing in aging, cognition research and outreach.

According to Clemson University President Jim Clements, the partnership between the University and Prisma Health in aging research has already yielded important outcomes. He sees a dedicated space for this work as necessary to increase the positive impact on citizens in South Carolina and beyond.

"Aging, and the challenges that may accompany it, can affect us all, and is something many loved ones and caregivers face every day," Clements said. "That makes the work being done by Clemson University and Prisma Health timely and vital considering the everincreasing proportion of older adults across our state and nation."

MRI unit to be housed at Oconee Memorial Hospital for research as well as patient diagnostics. 3T technology differs from standard MRI units (1.5 T) in that it allows more refined imaging detail, particularly related to changes in the brain, and is a critical tool for research related to aging. A Certificate of Need application for the MRI was filed with the state on Feb. 18, 2022 and is currently under review.

Both institutions are working to improve access to MRI technology for researchers, patients and health care providers. Providing this technology at Prisma Health Oconee Memorial Hospital ensures patients who live in Oconee County will no longer have to travel outside of their service area for imaging studies that require the 3T magnet. "The challenges inherent to research and patient care related to aging and cognition are varied and multidisciplinary," said Mark S. O'Halla, president and chief executive officer of Prisma Health. "Our partnership and the physical space afforded to the institute not only embed it within a healthcare organization, but also create a hub where faculty, staff and researchers can come together to provide important services accessible to community members close to where they live." The official opening celebration is an important milestone in the completion of the institute's new home, and researchers spanning multiple Clemson University colleges and departments have been actively working in sections of the Oconee space for months.

Clemson's part in a multiuniversity research project funded by the National Institutes of Health's National Institute on Aging. Clemson was chosen as one of six sites across the U.S. to conduct this study, which is the largest primary prevention trial to date designed to test the effectiveness of computer-based training to protect against Alzheimer's disease and related dementias.

The Clemson University portion of the grant, $3.5 million, was awarded to Lesley Ross, Ph.D., Smart-LIFE Endowed Chair in Aging and Cognition in the College of Behavioral, Social and Health Sciences; director of the Clemson University Institute for Engaged Aging; and associate professor in the University's Department of Psychology. Ross is leading the Clemsor PACT Study with Chris Phillips, Ph.D., rese assistant professor in Department of Psychol serving as co-investig who is leading partici recruitment and reter efforts across sites.
