Parking Garage C, located adjacent to the terminal building, will offer 750 new public vehicle parking spaces and 750 ready-return rental car spaces. ## Greenville Technical College President Keith Miller announces retirement plans

On February 21, the Technical Greenville College Area Commission approved President Keith Miller's plan to retire in July 2025. This approval sets into motion a national search process that will culminate in the selection of a successor.

Dr. Miller assumed the leadership of Greenville Technical College (GTC) in July 2008 as the institution's second president. He brought experienced leadership to the position, having spent 12 years as a college president in Illinois, first for Spoon River College and later for Black Hawk College.

Miller began his own college education at a community college, earning an associate degree in technical education – radiologic technology before adding a bachelor's degree, a master's degree, and finally, a doctorate degree in adult and continuing education. This experience as a two-year college student has informed his interest in helping students navigate unfamiliar territory. He has ensured that GTC puts students first, with emphasis on not getting students enrolled but seeing that they are supported from day one to graduation and that every student has an equal opportunity for success. Innovative efforts include the African American Male Scholars Initiative, the state's only Collegiate Recovery Program at the two-year college level, and a Student Assistance and Resources Center where those facing the obstacles of hunger and emergency financial barriers can find relief. The result is an inclusive environment where each employee and every student can find a sense of belonging, earning GTC the Higher Education Excellence in Diversity award seven times, most recently in ment of its mission of transforming lives through education, he has greatly improved efficiency. While many educational leaders confine themselves to academic processes and traditions, Miller has borrowed best practices from business and industry in to maximize resources and focus on continuous improvement. The college now uses Franklin Covey's Four Disciplines of Execution to focus the entire employee base on a common goal and recently received the Franklin Covey Greatness Award for exceptional progress with the system. A focus on Baldrige quality practices has resulted in GTC being named a South Governors Quality Award Gold Achiever, the only technical college in the state to ever win at any level.

Much of what Miller has accomplished at the college has been the result of productive partnerships. He has worked closely with employers - both large and small – including BMW, Michelin, Lockheed Martin, Prisma Health, Bon Secours St. Francis, Bosch Rexroth, and local, state, national and international organizations with ties to the Upstate and South Carolina.

"I am grateful to the elected officials, the employers, the educators at all levels, and the college's faculty and staff who have worked alongside me to move the college and the Upstate forward," said Dr. Keith Miller. "My job has taken me across the state and around the country, and I have yet to encounter a better environment anywhere for collaboration that ensures progress."

As these partners discuss workforce needs, Miller has worked to create innovative solutions. Examples include the Center for Manufacturing Innovation, which is training and educating mechatronics technicians, machinists, and electronic technicians for advanced manufacturing. When employers in that sector asked for an educational step beyond the associate degree, one that would create candidates for technical and managerial leadership positions, Miller gained support from legislators for an applied bachelor's degree advanced manufacturing technology at the technical college level. GTC is now the only two-year college in the state pioneering that curriculum.

When Prisma Health sought a new avenue for creating well-qualified professionals to enter the healthcare field, Miller worked with the hospital system to bring the Prisma Health Center for Health & Life Sciences to reality. Opening fall 2024, the largest building on the college's Barton Campus will allow students to pursue careers in healthcare and complete general education requirements. This facility will impact 90 percent of GTC students and serve all of the 500-600 health science graduates that the college contributes to the local workforce each Similarly, the Truist Culinary and Hospitality Innovation Center is an answer to employer needs.

When the hospitality industry needed to expand its pipeline of skilled employees, Miller matched that need with those of an underserved area in West Greenville, creating a change agent that provides a clear path to upward mobility as it increases the number of qualified hospitality employees.

The Center for Work-Development, expected to open in 2026, will solve the welding challenge in workforce development. The General Assembly has appropriated $15 million for this faciliof Community Colleges (AACC), board member for the American Council on Education (ACE), and co-chair of the Voluntary Framework for Accountability.

Miller is also very active in organizations that improve the community. He served as chair of the Greenville Chamber board of directors, chair of the Commerce Club board, and board member for United Way of Greenville County, Upstate Alliance South Carolina, and the Health Sciences Center -Prisma Health. In addition, he was chairman of March for Babies and chairman of the board for the Urban League of the Upstate. He has been recognized for his many contributions to the community and the state with the Order of the Palmetto and the Education Spirit Award from the Community Foundation of Greenville.

"Naturally, it will be difficult to see a leader of Keith Miller's caliber step back," said Ray Lattimore, chair of the Greenville Technical College Area Commission. "But as we look with gratitude at all he has accomplished in his years of leadership, we know that he has done an amazing job of preparing this institution and the students and employers it serves so well to face the future from a position of incredible strength."
