More than 200 local residents turned out on April 25 to hear and see about the initial options for the redesign of Morgan Square. City of Spartanburg photo

Residents turn out to get a look at the future of Morgan Square

In the life of a city, some community meetings beckon more than others. Tuesday night's meeting about Morgan Square, on Morgan Square, was one of those events.

More than 200 local residents from all walks of life attended the unique outdoor meeting held on the community's most cherished and well-known public space. They came to be among the first to see the initial options for a long-discussed and highly anticipated redesign of the Square, an idea that picked up momentum in the aftermath of the COVID-19 pandemic.

A little background for those who may be new to town: The pandemic prompted the City to restrict vehicular traffic along Morgan Square's W Main St. side to provide outdoor dining space and a lifeline — to the Square's restaurants, which were prohibited by the state from serving customers inside in the early days of the pandemic. The expanded outdoor pedestrian space proved to be wildly popular, turning what was formerly a beautiful but irregularly used space into one filled with people every day of the week. And data shows that more people visit Morgan Square today than even before the pandemic. Recognizing the success of the street closure in bringing more activity to the Square, city partners such as OneSpartanburg, downtown business owners, and, most importantly, individual residents and taxpayers began prodding City Council to extend the street closure and explore options to enhance the Square's appeal as a pedestrian-centered space. In response, City Council approved a plan to study the issue, appointing a special committee last year to guide the process of identifying a redesign for the Square that will support the City's long-term vision for downtown.

At every step of the way since, the City has collected public input, through surveys, public meetings, and design charettes. That feedback was used by planning consultants with to inform and guide the three proposed designs that were unveiled night. Tuesday Liz Richardson just moved back to Spartanburg and was excited by the new options to bring a more modern feel to Morgan Square. "What I really enjoyed were the multiple greenspaces, as well as water features. I feel like a water feature draws people together and gets them interactive with their environment," she offered.

Each design addresses the needs and wants that emerged as a consensus of the feedback gathered since the formal effort launched earlier this year. From the inclusion of ample greenspace and a long-term tree canopy plan, to outdoor dining space, facilities that will enable expanded concerts and events and a design that creates newfound cohesion and connectivity with the rest of downtown, each concept uses a variety of elements and approaches to address the community's goals.

A quick recap of each of the designs:

Concept 1 - Knitting Into the Urban Fabric. The chapters of public life, daily commerce, and built form that have shaped Morgan Square through the centuries have left a unique imprint. When inscribed on the Square, these lines and layers of historical development provide a signature urban form that informs the arrangement of spaces, movement and circulation. By merging the historical forms of the Square into a new design, both visitors and local residents will have the opportunity to learn and experience the Square in a way that is rich with meaning, and uniquely Spartanburg.

Concept 2 – Celebrating the Landscape. The physiography of the City of Spartanburg is integral to the significant legacy of industry that was built around the network of streams and falls in the Upstate. Morgan Square represented the heart of thriving commerce and social life that grew out of these industries. With the transition of Spartanburg's blueways and greenways from industrial use to their restoration for public use, the Square now represents the opportunity to celebrate this unique landscape and its enduring role.

Concept 3 - Hub City Coming Together. Morgan Square has been the center of commerce and public life in Spartanburg for centuries. Now moving into its third century, the Square has the opportunity to recapture its role as a thriving hub of daily business activity and community events. Based on the strong desire of the Spartanburg community to make the Square more accessible and welcoming for people, this design concept is organized around the safe and comfortable movement of pedestrians into the Square and the provision of spaces for daily activity and enjoyment.

Folks who weren't able to make it out to the workshop but still want to share their thoughts on the design concepts can do so by going online to https://www.surveymonkey.com/r/msquare to take a short survey.

A final decision on the ultimate design of Morgan Square is still weeks away. The City, the Morgan Square redesign committee and the City's consultants will take the more than 100 feedback cards that people filled out on April 25 and use that to refine and narrow down the three concepts into one proposal. City Council will make the final decision on the ultimate design. There will be additional opportunities for the public to weigh in on the designs that will be shared in the coming weeks.

Visit the City of Spartanburg's website at https:// sc-spartanburg.civicplus.com/ for more information about the project and to see illustrations of each concept.

Drawing on her own experience, Spartanburg Methodist College (SMC) senior Geovana Batres Ardon's desire to help other LatinX students see a path to college led her to victory and a $1,000 prize in the college's first Apex Showcase on April 20. Batres Ardon's "A College Path Para Todos" topped 31 seniors who presented their Capstone projects to show their academic and professional development growth.

"The senior Capstone projects test our students on everything they've learned and challenges them to put it into action on a project they are passionate about," said Courtney Shelton, vice president of student & professional development at SMC. "Geovana's desire to help other LatinX students is inspiring. We're proud of her and all of our seniors for the incredible work they put into these projects."

SMC implemented the senior Capstone as part of its degree-intergrated professional development program when it launched its bachelor's degrees in 2019. The Apex Showcase allows students to highlight those skills and compete for cash prizes.

Batres Ardon's project provided LatinX high school students with information and resources to help show them a path to higher education. Shelby Lopez and Cristian Bonilla Cruz were the other finalists presenting their Capstone projects to a panel of judges from the Spartanburg community. Lopez finished second with "Art by Shelby Allisun," showcasing her art and her desire to use her business degree to start an art business rather than doing art as a hobby. Bonilla Cruz claimed third with "ESL with English Crossing," which helped show Hispanics the resources provided by English Crossing to help them learn English and break down language barriers.

All 31 Capstone students participated in the Apex Showcase, networking with guests and presenting their own projects in a reception prior to the main competition.

Clearly Furman campaign launches with goal of $426 million by 2026

By Clinton Colmenares, Furman University Director of News and Media Strategy

Furman University recently announced its largest campaign ever. Clearly Furman, Campaign for our Third Century aims to raise $426 million by 2026, the start of the university's next 100

The announcement came on a clear evening during a kickoff event, the Purple Party, with more than 750 Furman faculty, staff, alumni and friends gathered on Roberts Rugby Pitch in purple shirts and sneakers to celebrate. Cheerleaders and the pep band, led by Board of Trustees Chair Kevin Byrne '91, kicked off the party and brought the crowd to their feet.

The party capped off three days of activities showcasing scholarship, innovation, engaged learning and other academic endeavors by students, faculty and staff at the Paladin Pitch, Furman Engaged and Furman Showcase. At the end of the evening, Furman President Elizabeth Davis announced the campaign's bold goal.

"This is Furman's moment. This is our moment," Davis said. "Our moment to come together, to propel our university into its third century with a clear vision and the resources to meet our enormous potential."

Davis said everyone will play a role in the campaign. "We will, through our faculty, staff and graduates – and with your support – influence action and ideas across the 21st century. We must be bold. We must be ambitious. Now is our time. Please join us."

Campaign Co-Chair Robert Hill '83 stepped forward and said, "And now, just as we celebrated our thrilling and historic win (in the NCAA Men's basketball tournament), let's hit the buzzer and launch this historic and transformational paign!"

Hill and his wife, campaign Co-Chair Margaret Hill '83, joined Davis and the three pressed a ceremonial launch button. A sweeping, inspiring video played, then fireworks lit up the sky.

The university is well on its way to reaching its goal. A "quiet" leadership phase has already raised more than $309 million, thanks in part to a $10 million commitment by David Trone '77 and his wife June for student mental health and to create the Hillel Endowment Fund, and a $10 million commitment by Ravenel Curry III '63 for renovations to Timmons Arena, the cornerstone of a $40 million project that is 83% funded. Furman has also received more than $52.5 million from The Duke Endowment to fund The Furman Advantage.

Campaigns aren't just about raising large sums of money, said Heidi Hansen McCrory, vice president for development.

"The Clearly Furman campaign provides a moment for Furman to focus on our future, and to seek the philanthropy that ulty, staff, alumni and makes that future come to life," McCrory said prior to the launch. "It's an opportunity to engage everyone in the life of the university, and a real opportunity to express our pride in some public ways."

The campaign will elevate pride in Furman, educate the community about the university's vision for the future and engage people in being part of advancing the university toward that future.

It's not just Furman's future that the campaign aims to change, McCrory

"What really matters is making the world a better place through Furman and the philanthropic support of this campaign. How do we change the world through our students, facthrough what we do on this campus?"

The university has identified six major initiatives for the campaign.

Scholarships, Teaching and Academic Programs: $130 million. Scholarships, professorships, department initiatives. "We know the world needs the skills of Furman graduates more than ever," McCrory said. "We want to ensure that every student who wants to be at Furman has that opportunity, and scholarships make that possible."

The Furman Advantage: $126 million. The Duke Endowment has helped fund Furman's unique approach to student success, including Pathways, student research, study away and internships. These funds would permanently endow The Wellness, Belonging and Community: $30 million. This helps fund The Center for Inclusive Communities and programs for students that focus on wellness, belonging, community, and mental and physical fitness and health.

Athletics, Coaching Competitiveness: $50 million. Most of these funds will finance the renovation of Timmons Arena, but also provide scholarships and funds for recruiting, coaches' salaries and other needs that help the Paladins compete on and off the field.

The Institutes: $40 million. Furman has four institutes that conduct research and give students unique opportunities to engage with the community and with the private sector. They are The Shi Institute for Sustainable Communities, The Hill Institute for Innovation and Entrepreneurship, The Institute for the Advancement of Community Health and The Riley Institute.

The Annual Fund: $50 million. This fund allows the university to respond to the most pressing needs of the institution and ensures all students receive the high-impact learning experiences that will prepare them for meaningful lives and careers.

Beginning this summer. the Clearly Furman campaign will go on the road. visiting alumni and friends in 27 cities over the next three years, starting in New York in June.
